Adapted from Eugene O'Neill's successful stage play, the scene has been filmed with even more daring than marked the stage offering. It portrays a girl, deserted in childhood by her father, who thinks he is helping her by sending her far from the influence of the sea which he faars, trapped into a confession of the life into which her father, who thinks her a lovely Madoma, and her sweetheart, who has fallen in love with her "because she is the first decent woman he ever has known". Just what she has been, the scene works up to a dramatic fury almost unbearable in its intensity. Blanche Sweet, George Marion and William Russell are the actors in the powerful sequence. Nor. Leacock should require no introduction, as he is famous on two constituents for his sparkling humor, scintillating wit, and keen satire.

He first achieved fame through his books, which have been very widely trad, but it is as a lecturer that Mr. Leacock stands without peer, and to miss an evening's entratamment furnished by him would be a loss infeer. His humor is infectious and irresistible, and all who avail themselves of t is opportunity to hear him are assured of evering jemmed full of mirth.

WOLFVILLE WINS FIRST GAME OF LEAGUE

Defeated Windsor Last Thursday
Evening by Score of 6 to 5

The Wolfville bockey team captured the first game of the Valley Leagur bepore seven hundred enthusiastic spectators on New Year's night, carrying off the long end of a 6-5 score in a hard fought game with their old rivals. Vindsor. The locals, taking the ice with apparently certain defeat facing templayed themselves from under a times goal lead in the first few mirutes and romped home to victory in the firals.

Tom Dick opened the first period by netting Wolfville's first score. Windsor came back strong with fast skating and skiful stick handling and inside of three minutes the tally stood 3-1. But the hard checking of Wolfville's defence was too much for the visitors and they were able to sag the twine only once more in the period while the home team captured two.

The second period developed some real old fashioned hockey, replete with and work, fist fights and arguments. Shortly after play opened Thomson made an end to end rush and netted the puck from the wing for what appeared to be the tying score. Nevertheless the umpire reversed the goal judge's ecision, leaving Windsor still one to the good. Later Andrews scored the endy tally of the period when he knocked the rubber past Kuhn during a mixup in froot of the visitor's net and even dre score. There was a short interruption at this time when Mosher and Dick mistook the ice for pug-listic drig. After some persuasion both indicated their willingness to shake hands and play hockey.

As in the first period, Dick opened the scoring it the final stanza and netted the rubber a few minutes after the faceoff. Wincsor made a strong come back and tied the score during a scramble in front of the home net. With only a few minutes to go it looked as if the summing tally with only four minutes to go it looked as if the summy tally with only four minutes to go it looked as if the summy tally with only four minutes to para.
