

THE DETECTIVE'S CLUB. THE TRAGEDY OF KIM GROVE. CHAPTER XXIII. A STRANGE REVELATION.

Week after week of the dreary winter passed, and Karl Zickoff still went through the dull routine of his life as a music-teacher. But little progress was made that he could see in the investigation that was to clear his name from the infamous stain that rested upon it.

down the road and into Dalton. His cheeks were flushed, his eyes glittered unaccountably, and on his face was an expression of ungodly despair. The rapid light soon brought him to the door of the room. He stepped in, and closed the door behind him with a bang. Then he threw himself into a chair, pressed his hands to his head, and endeavored to collect his chaotic thoughts.

After some friendly words they stepped up to the bar to drink. The detective drugged his own whiskey, and then, under the pretense that he had by mistake poured out the wrong liquor, insisted on Dalton to change with him. So Dalton drank the drugged whiskey.

did. The risk incurred was nothing, only that of a scolding. Her eyes were tender and pleading. 'If I told you to go to the devil, I should be telling you to go to the right place. Believe me, I mean you no harm. I admit your courage. I wonder at your ingenuity in disguising yourself as the New York detective. How could you carry the part so successfully?'

If it hadn't attended to, it may run into trouble. 'I cannot afford to be sick,' insisted Carlos. 'No,' replied the doctor. 'By the way, I explained the doctor, starting as if something had suddenly caught his attention, 'what has become of that car?'

A Skillful Surgical Operation. The American Ambassador in Vienna, Mr. Kasson, had lately forwarded to his Government an interesting account of a remarkable surgical operation performed by Dr. Joseph Billroth of Vienna, which would tend to allay the rumors of the death of the Emperor.
