Poetry.
EPITAPH TO EBENEZER ELLIOTT.
WRITTEN BY HIMSELF.
Stop, Moral! Here thy Brother lies,
The Port of the Poor,
His books were rivers, words and skies,
The rainbow and the moon.
His teachers were the torn hearts' wail,
The tyrant and the slave.
The silent prayer, the jail,
The palace—and the grave!
Sin met thy brother everywhere!
And is thy brother blamed?
A heart to feel and dare,
And He exemption claim'd!
The mearest thing, earth's feeblest worm,
Aid for a scion or hate?
But honored in a peasant's form
The equal of the great!
He bless'd the steward, whose wealth makes
The poor man's little more!
Yet loathed the haughty wretch that takes
From plunder'd labor's store.
A hand to do, a head to plan,
A heart to feel and dare,
Tell man's worst foes, here lies the man
Who drew them as they are.

From Hunting Adventures in South Africa. ENCOUNTER WITH A LIONLESS.

Suddenly I observed a number of vultures seated on the plain about a quarter of a mile ahead of us, and close beside them stood a huge lioness, consuming a bloodbuck which she had killed. She was assisted by her cubs, who were about a dozen in number, which feasted along with her in the most friendly and confidential manner. Directing my followers' attention to the spot, I remarked, 'I see the lion, to which they replied, 'What? what? Ah! Alas! what a loss! she had just been shot!' I was instantly reminded of the lioness and wheeling about, they pressed their heels to their horses' sides, and were preparing to betake themselves to flight. I asked them what they were going to do—to which they answered, 'We have not yet placed cases on our rifles.' This was true, but while this short conversation was passing the lioness had observed us. Raising her full, round face, she overhailed us for a few seconds, and then set off at a snail's pace toward a range of mountains some miles to the northward; the whole troop of jackals also started off in another direction: there was therefore, no time to think of caps. The first move was to bring her bay, and not a second was to be lost—Spurring my good and lively steed, and shouting to my men to follow, I flew across the plain, and being fortunately mounted on Colberg, the flower of my stud, I gained upon her at every stride. This was to me a joyful moment, and I at once made up my mind that she or I must die.

The lioness having had a long start of me, we went over a considerable extent of ground before I came up with her. She was a large full grown beast, and the bare and level nature of the plain added to her imposing appearance. Finding that I gained upon her, she reduced her pace from a trot to a trot, carrying her tail stuck out behind her, and slowed a little to one side. I shouted to her to halt, as I wished to speak with her, upon which she suddenly pulled up, and sat upon her haunches like a dog, with her back toward me, not even deigning to look round. She then appeared to say to herself, 'Does this fellow know who he is after?' Having thus sat for half a minute, as if involved in thought, she sprang to her feet, and facing about, stood looking at me for a few seconds, moving her tail slowly from side to side, showing her teeth, and growling fiercely. She next made a short run forward, making a loud, rumbling noise like thunder. This she did to intimidate me; but finding that I did not flinch in the least, she stood still, and in the demonstrations, she stretched out her massive arms, and lay down on the grass.

My Hottentots now coming up, we all three dismounted, and drawing our rifles from their holsters, we made an examination to see if the powder was up in the nipples, and put on our caps. While this was doing the lioness sat up, and showed some symptoms of uneasiness. She looked at first at us, and then behind her, as if to see if the coast were clear, after which she deigned a short run toward us uttering her deep-drawn murderous growls. Having secured the three horses to one another by their reins, we led them on as if intended to pass her, in the hope of obtaining a broadside. But this she carefully avoided, and she watched us only her full front.

I had given Stoffus my moose rifle, with orders to shoot her if she should spring on us, on no account to fire before me. Kiemsboy was to stand ready to hand me my rifle in case the two grooved Dugon Purdy rifle, in case of the two grooved Dugon rifle, should prove inefficient. My men as yet had been steady, but they were in a precious stew, their faces having assumed a ghastly piteous, and I had a painful feeling that I could place no reliance on them, when a start of us, and she kept advancing. We turned the horses' tails to her. I bent on one side, and taking a steady aim at her breast, let fly. The ball cracked loudly on her tawny hide, and crippl'd her in the shoulder, upon which she charged with an appalling roar, and in the twinkling of an eye she was in the midst of us. At this moment Stoffus's rifle exploded in the hand, and Kiemsboy, whom I had ordered to stand ready by me, danced about like a duck in a gale of wind. The lioness sprang upon Colberg, and fearfully lacerated his ribs and haunches with her horrid teeth and claws; the worst wound was on his haunch exhibiting a sickening, yawning gash, more than twelve inches long, almost laying bare the very bone. I was very cool and steady, and did not feel in the least degree nervous, having fortunately great confidence in my own shooting; but I still must confess, when the whole affair was over, I felt that it was a very awful situation, and attended with extreme peril, as I had no friend with me on whom I could rely.

When the lioness sprang on Colberg, I stood out from the horses, ready with my second barrel for the first chance she would give me of a clear shot. This she quickly did; for, seemingly satisfied with the quick discharge she had now taken, she quitted Colberg, and slinging her tail to one side, trotted slowly past within a few paces of me, taking one step to the left. I pitched my rifle to my shoulder, and in another second the lioness was stretched on the plain a lifeless corpse. In the struggle of death she half turned on her back, and stretched her neck and fore arms convulsively, when she fell back to her former position; her mighty arms hung powerless by her side, her lower jaw fell, blood streamed from her mouth, and she expired. At the moment I fired my second shot, Stoffus who hardly knew whether he was alive or dead, allowed the three horses to escape—

DREAMING ON WEDDING CAKE.
A bachelor editor out west, who had received from the fair head of a bride piece of elegant wedding cake to dream on, thus gives the result of his experience.

'We put it under the head of our pillow, and our eyes sweetly as a infant, and blessed with an easy conscience, soon fell into a deep slumber. The gods of dreamy grandly touched us, and lo! the fancy we were married! Never was a little editor so happy. It was 'my love,' 'dearest,' 'sweetest,' ringing in our ears every moment. Oh! that the dream had been broken off here! But no, some evil genius put it into the head of our ducky to have pudding for dinner, just to please her lord. Well, the pudding was served, and a huge slice abstracted from just the plate before us.

'My dear,' said we fondly, 'did you make that?'

'Yes, love; ain't it nice?'

'Glorious, the best bread pudding I ever tasted in my life.'

'I am pudding, ducky,' suggested my wife. 'Oh no, dearest, bread pudding, I always was fond of 'em.'

'Call that bread pudding?' exclaimed my wife, while her pretty lips smiled slightly with contempt.

'Certainly, my dear; reckon I've had enough at the Sherwood House to know. Bread pudding, my love, by all means, I will not eat any more of 'em.'

'That's all right; I am so hungry that I will eat of any food that comes my way.'

'My love, my sweet, my dear love,' exclaimed we, soothingly, 'do not get angry; I'm sure it's very good, it is bread pudding.'

'You mean, my dear,' fondly replied my wife, in a high tone, 'you know it is a plain pudding.'

'Then, my dear, it is so meanly put together and so badly brewed, that the devil himself would not know it. I tell you, madam, most distinctly and emphatically, and I will not be contradicted, that it is bread pudding, and the best kind of that.'

'It is plain pudding,' shrieked my wife, as she hurried a glass of claret in my face, the glass itself rattling and clanging in my ears. 'I will not be contradicted, that it is bread pudding, and the best kind of that.'

'Bread pudding' gaped we, pluck to the last, and grasping a roasted chicken by the leg. 'Plain pudding' rose above the din, as I had a distinct recollection of two plates smother across my head.

'Bread pudding' we groined in rage, as the chickens left our hands, and flying round, snatching across the table, landed on madam's bosom.

NEWLY-INVENTED STEAM ENGINE.—We witnessed, a day or two ago, the trial of a newly invented engine, which, we should say, is destined to supersede that class of engines now in general use. The inventor is Mr. John Dood, of West Flamboro, who has devoted much time to the study of mechanics. Were we at full liberty, we should hardly know how to describe it, so correct a correct idea of its simplicity and completeness. It differs, however, entirely from the common steam engine, both in principle and construction. The model we saw is estimated at one horse power, yet it seemed to us to accomplish with perfect ease what the common engine would find it difficult to do. The inventor engaged in it; such, for instance, as driving a circular saw. Attached to the shaft was one of these fifteen inches in diameter, and a piece of half-inch plank was sawed into strips with the most perfect ease. Afterwards a much thicker piece of plank was placed on the platform, and we could perceive no difference in the velocity of the saw. The entire engine may be put into a common candle box, and is perfect without itself, requiring no other fitting than being attached to a common steam boiler. We understand that the inventor intends to have the engine patented both here and in the United States and in England; to which latter place he will proceed with a model for exhibition at the World's Fair in Mexico.—Dundas Warder.

COURT OF LEEDS.—George Sherwood, Esq., has been elected Warden of the County by a large majority. Mr. Gowen, finding his own chance hopeless, used great exertions to prevent the election of Mr. Sherwood, but without success. The elections in Leeds have always been made political, and the Conservatives possess the majority. We assume, therefore, that the defeat of Mr. Gowin is tantamount to a repudiation of that gentlemen by the party. He is an excellent though, and has commenced an electioneering tour through the County, in the hope of ousting Mr. Richards at the next election. This could be accomplished if a Conservative, who possessed the respect of his party, were in the field; but Mr. Gowen can amass a Candidate, and by persisting in assuming a Candidate he will only injure the party, without benefitting himself.—Spectator.

THE Stockholm papers announce that Jenny Lind has sent to that city $250,000, to be distributed among the poor.
