S. S. Senlac Destroyed by Fire

To-day Mr. A. J. Harvey received a message from Mr. W. N. McDonald, of Sydney, intimating that the s.s. Senlac and entire cargo was burnt to the water's edge in Sydney Harbor this morning. No particulars of the fire are to hand. The Senlac was formerly used as a river boat for which she was especially built. Last season and this she ran here from Prince Edward Island and the Sydneys, bringing cargoes of produce and live stock. The Senlac figured in the big gale that raged over the Newfoundland coasts on Nov. 16th last. It will be remembered that a few hours after leaving here she was caught in the height of the storm and was for over 24 hours holed to during which time she had in tow the Annie, a Piacentia Bay craft and which was disabled. The Senlac took the Annie in tow and attempted to reach the land with her, but without success, as the hawser parted three times, though the craft turned up safely a few days afterwards.

That Fish Embargo.

Colonial Secretary Bennett is in receipt of the following cable:—
"Representation made in your Telegram of November 12th, as to fish for Greece have been attentively and sympathetically considered; but it is regretted that for reasons of general policy which have made it necessary to issue instructions to Gibraltar, Malta for the time being to detain all cargoes for Greece it has not yet been found possible to comply with the wishes of your Ministers. I will communicate with you as soon as possible."

News Still Better.

The most re-assuring item of news about the Greek imbroglio is the statement that the Greek War Staff has withdrawn a division of the Greek army from Langasa to Seres. Langasa is a town about 10 miles north east of Saloniki, on a direct line between that port and Seres, which is a town on the railway between Doiran, occupied by the British and Dedegatch, the Bulgarian seaport. This movement takes this Greek division forty miles from the zone where the British are operating west of Lake Doiran, and puts them in a position to block a Bulgarian advance from the north east. The British have behind them two railways leading to Saloniki, which are connected by a branch railway. The withdrawal of this division is said to be the result of an agreement between the Greek General Staff and the Generals of the Entente Allies. It may be that King Constantine and his staff consider they have gone far enough to help the Kaiser and embarrass the Entente. The Greeks hate the Bulgars and the Bulgars hate the Greeks. The bone of contention is that portion of Macedonia of which Saloniki is the port. Saloniki and the surrounding region was seized by Greek troops in the war with Turkey and the refusal of the Greeks to vacate it after peace was restored with Turkey was one of the causes of the second Balkan war. This difficulty may be surmounted by the Bulgars refraining from crossing the frontier. But even that does not do away with another difficulty. The Austrians, for a generation have had their eyes on Saloniki. They have been desirous of annexing Serbia and pushing their way to Saloniki, to obtain a seaport on the Aegean. King Constantine's policy of refusing aid to Serbia has raised apprehension in the minds of the Greeks that if once the Austrians reach Saloniki, they will refuse to vacate it. That is the dilemma in which the influence of his wife and his German training has put him. Serbia was a buffer state which protected him from Austria. The Greeks have now lost that protection, which they might have kept by aiding the Allies and the Serbians with a quarter of a million men. If he turns on the Entente now and cuts their line of communication he may lose what the Greeks won in 1912, for the Central Powers declare that while they may give up Belgium as a term of peace, they will not give up Serbia. That means Austria intends to keep Serbia, and Serbia is only a step towards the possession of Greek Macedonia and the sea, and particularly Salonika, which they have long coveted. Should the Huns and Bulgars follow up the Entente troops over the frontier Constantine will have to make his election. If he turns on the Entente, or even if he refuses to join them, he may lose Salonika and Greek Macedonia. The next few days will be days of anxiety, of peril to our troops should Constantine turn on us; of safety should Constantine throw in his lot with us. By doing so, he can make certain of saving his country from the ultimate aims of the Central Powers. The pity of it all is that he was not wise enough to keep Venizelos, respect the Greek constitution, and disregard the influence of his wife, the sister of the Kaiser.

McMurdo's Store News

TUESDAY, Dec. 14, 1915.
Our Christmas display of Willard's Chocolates this year is a very beautiful one, and we should like you to see it. In addition to the standard ones, which we have in the usual full variety, we have some special Christmas Gift Boxes, which may be called the Holly Box, the Home Box, the Rose Box, which are very beautiful, as well as very seasonable, being a handsome box filled with the finest chocolates and other confectionery. These, both in appearance, and contents, are some of the finest we have ever seen and we believe you will have no difficulty in finding what you want in this line. The price list is a very wide one 50c. to $2.75 a box.
The fur-topped collar finishes many a one-piece dress.

The Transfer of the S. S. Ethie.

Mr. R. G. Reid, of the Reid- Newfoundland Company, interviewed the Government on Saturday with regard to the freight congestion in Green Bay and intimated that it would be in the public interests if the s.s. Ethie, plying on Trinity Bay, could be transferred to Green Bay, while the s.s. Petrel, now on Green Bay, would take up the work on Trinity Bay. There is very little freight carried on the Trinity Bay steamer and the Petrel would be quite large enough for all passengers and freight offering a larger than the Petrel could, with the s.s. Clyde, easily relieve the congestion of freight in Green Bay. It was important that the matter be dealt with early, as the ports in Green Bay will shortly be closed by ice and the Christmas freight is now going forward. Under the above circumstances, the Government agreed to the transfer of the Ethie until the freight congestion could be relieved, the Petrel doing her work in the meantime.
