BAYLEY'S.

CONGRATULATED ON THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF PASTORATE

Ven. Dean Davis, of South London, Presented With Address and Good Wishes.

At St. James' Church, South London, last evening, there was a celebration of the thirtyeth anniversary of the pastorate of the church's incumbent, the Rev. Dean Davis, who has been in the pastorate of the church for so long a period being Rev. Dean Davis.

Thirty years ago yesterday, Rev. Mr. Davis arrived in this city and took charge of the very small parish—as it was then. Changes have taken place in the interval, and last night there was much rejoicing. Merit was made several times of Mr. Davis' elevation to the deanery, and the bishop, who created him to that office was among those present last evening to offer greetings. Not only did the clergy of the Church of England in and about London, and the congregation of St. James, present their congratulations, but the best wishes of the other denominations were tendered by the respective pastors of the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian congregations.

The evening took the form of a social reunion of the church members, the vast majority of whom were present. The schoolroom was decorated for the occasion, and the seats were placed in a manner to promote sociability. The chair was taken by Mr. B. S. Murray, after a prayer of general thanksgiving was invoked by those present, led by Rev. Canon Richardson.

Chairman Murray, in addressing the assembly, spoke of the honor they were doing to one, who, for almost a third of a century, had nobly, loyally and faithfully performed the work of his Master in the Parish of St. James, who has been on the firing line first and always, and never shirked his work, and who found St. James' Parish on the morning of the 24th of January, 1874, simply an outpost. Last night—30 years after—he faces a congregation creditable to himself and satisfactory to the diocese of which he was now so important a factor. The average congregation, no matter of what denomination, were very much inclined to keep many things as a matter of course. They understood that their ministers have many privileges, particularly those of being on duty seven days in the week, and 24 hours a day; of being on demand at all hours of the day or night, in order to meet all sorts and conditions of men, and needless to say, must always say and do the right thing at the right place, otherwise criticism was not always withheld. People should not forget the fact that the average minister was only human. He then called upon Mr. John Shaw, warden of the church, to read an address. It was one of congratulation and gratitude from the congregation, expressing in the fullest sense the feeling that existed among those who so dearly loved the dean.

Venerable Archdeacon Richardson, as one who had known Dean Davis since the former came here, and as one who thanked him for being the first clergyman he met on the first day he walked along the streets of London, on his arrival from Halifax, made a very feeling reference personally to the friendship that existed between them. The audience had come here in three sections—first, as representatives of St. James' congregation; second, as representatives of the sister churches; and thirdly as representatives of the clergy of the Church of England of London. They had come, inspired by good purposes to render honor to whom honor was due. An anniversary which had reference to the development of Christian service was being celebrated, and it was to be celebrated by any one man on his account. All felt that a continued ministry in this church, for so long a period, was to be deeply congratulated, and was worthy of being marked as they were marking it this night. They were living in a time of changes, but there was only one man in the Diocese of Huron, whose ministry was longer than that of the incumbent of St. James, South London. The speaker mentioned the deans of the old country of the past, and the present, and said that Dean Davis was a better Canada better than the lot of them put together. He concluded with some well-worded wishes.

Archdeacon Richardson then read an address that had been drawn up by the clergy of the Church of England in and about London, in which they congratulated their fellow-worker and bore testimony to his worth. The address was most complete and did great honor to Dean Davis. Mr. Macquenn, principal of the Victoria school, was then called upon. He told of how 26 years before he had been greeted by Mr. Davis, and he expressed his thankfulness for the friendship of the rector of St. James and the assistance he had always rendered him.

Representatives of the three other churches in South London were next called upon. Chairman Murray, First, Rev. J. G. Stuart, pastor of Knox Presbyterian Church, spoke. He remembered the occasion five years ago, when they celebrated Mr. Davis' silver wedding with the church. The relations during the past nine years had been most pleasant. In the most delightful things to think of was the close relationship by a long pastorate, for in time a minister became more intimate with the people than those of the congregation he represented.

Rev. George Walker, of the Wortley Road Baptist Church, referred to the suburb of South London being such a pleasant one on account of its being without a hotel which was largely to Mr. Davis, he said. He spoke of the joys of a minister in living in one place so long, and of the well wishes of the Baptists, he said, it was due to the dean's spirit that there was such good will, and he prayed that the dean would long be spared as rector of St. James' Church.

Rev. W. G. Howson, pastor of the Asklin Street Methodist Church, endorsed what had been said by his fellow-ministers. In their congratulations, he said, he had been told that South London were certainly sincere.

At this stage Miss Mattinson was called upon for a solo. With her charming contralto voice she sang "Dry Those Tears," Miss Minnie Fox delighted the gathering with two soprano solos, rendered in a splendid voice. The accompanist in each case was Mr. George Phelps, organist of St. James' Church.

The Bishop of Huron made a touching address. He began with a simile of a ship going out to sea and coming back after years of strife with the storms. And so, he said, he spoke of his buoyancy of spirit and his brightness in influence. People were always better for something bright; that was what made success in life. There were three reasons why he had honored Mr. Davis as he had to one of the highest offices in the diocese. First, because he was an eminent preacher, secondly, because he had been eminent in his labors; "a terrific visitor," their bishop-bearer who had made their life gladder and whose character was marked by consistency and nobleness; thirdly, because he was a true and faithful friend to all those he professed to love. In having Dean Davis as his pastor they had had a great privilege. The bishop then spoke of Mrs. Davis, who was loved by the congregation, and in conclusion he said he wished to make glad the recollections of the past, and anticipate the great joys of the future, and his reception in the ages which were yet to come.

The Dean was deeply moved by what had been said, and there was more than a usual tremor in his voice. "To say 'thank you,' and no more, would express what was in his heart, he said. The heart at times grew so full that one was unable to give utterance to what was in it. He had been confident that he had their sympathy and their prayers. To the address from the congregation, he replied that if there was one thing he had prayed for it was to be faithful to them, and he thanked them for all they had said about him, his wife and his household. His wife had worked side by side with him. He recalled his coming there, and he rejoiced last night that there were so many there as there were who had been there 30 years ago. He paid a tribute to the superintendent of the Sunday school, Mr. John Fox, who had been there over 30 years, and referred to the record of him and of others who had worked so earnestly at St. James. He reciprocated the kind words of the principal of the school, to which his children had been sent. Then, as to the other ministers, he said there had never been difficulty with them, nothing but brotherly kindness, and it was largely due to the brotherliness between the ministers that there was the good feeling between the peoples of South London.

"And what can I say to the words of my dearly-loved bishop?" said the dean. He thanked him feelingly, and said that he hoped no act of his would ever cause either the bishop or the others to regret what they had done. He appreciated the honors and concluded by saying that if there was anything he had coveted more, he coveted then, it was their sympathy and earnest prayers.

This concluded the programme, after which refreshments were served by the ladies of the church.

A SPLENDID CONCERT

Eighteenth Annual Under Auspices of F. C. B. C. Literary Society.

The Auditorium's interior was decorated last evening with the red and black, the colors of the Forest City Business College Literary Society. It was the occasion of the eighteenth annual concert of the college, and the drapings and shields, with these dark colors, added to the attractiveness of the Auditorium. As to the concert, it was one of the best ever given under the auspices of this well-known society, and the popularity of the organization and the concerts that have gained such a reputation was shown by the large attendance, the place being entirely filled.

None of the artists of the evening were more appreciated than the local favorites, Miss Margaret McCoy, who is fast becoming one of London's favorites. Her beautiful soprano voice was heard to great advantage in her vocal numbers, and she was called upon for encores, to which she graciously responded. Miss Maude Westervelt acted as accompanist of the evening with much credit.

As to the outside talent, Mr. James Fox upheld his reputation as a fun-maker, while Mr. Hubert W. Percy, of Toronto, proved an eloquist that Londoners will be glad to hear again. He and Mr. Fox were repeatedly endorsed, and gave other numbers that were on the programme with equal ability. The programme was as follows:

"I Wouldn't if I Wuz You," James Fox; "How Ruby Played," Hubert W. Percy; two little Irish songs (Lohe), "The First Letter," "You Better Ask Me," Miss Margaret McCoy; Pygmalion and Galatia, Act I, Scene I, Hubert W. Percy; "Steadfast With Me," James Fox; "A Week Away From Home," Hubert W. Percy; "How Do They Know, I Dunno," Jas. Fox; "Hail to the Chief," Hubert W. Percy; "Love the Peddler," Miss Margaret McCoy; "Bill Adams," Hubert W. Percy; "Lock High Men," James Fox; "St. Telemachus" (Tennyson), Hubert W. Percy.

In addition to the above numbers, Miss McCoy sang "The Little One Cryin'" and "So Let It Be," two very much enjoyed solos.

Will You Write a Postal

So a Sick One May Get Well?

Send no money—simply a postal card, giving the name of someone who needs help. Tell me the book to send. Then I will do this—I will arrange with a druggist near him so that he may take six bottles Dr. Shoop's Restorative. He may take it a month at my risk. If it succeeds, the cost is $5.00. If it fails, the druggist will bill the cost to me.

That month's test will show you what the remedy can do. It is the easiest way to convince you. It is the only way to induce all who need help to accept it. I make this offer to multiply my cures, and I am willing to trust the cured ones to be fair with me.

In the past twelve years I have cured hundreds of cases of rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, and all sorts of nerve pains. I have just as willingly when one says I have failed. The remedy is my discovery, the result of a lifetime's work. I have perfected it by watching results in thousands of the most difficult cases that physicians ever treated. I make this offer to multiply my cures, and I am willing to trust the cured ones to be fair with me.

Can you conceive of a sick one who will neglect such a treatment, when I take the entire risk? Address Dr. Shoop, Box 41, Racine, Wis. Mild cases, not chronic, are often cured with one or two bottles. At druggists.
