Bernstoff and party are reported to have expressed themselves as greatly pleased with the courtesy and suavity of the officials who waited upon them during their compulsory stay in the port of Halifax. But, the politic attention of the officials did not prevent them from using every means necessary to keep the German party in complete ignosance of the city and harbor, and to deprive them of any of their belongings which might prove useful to Germany in the war.

In the first place, the steamship frederich VIII, when about ten miles from the entrance of the harbor, was met by several vessels of the ubiquitous British Navy and detained until overtaken by the night. She was then guided into the harbor, but instead of remaining there, was conducted through the marrows into Bedford Basin. If, in the morning, curiosity led any of the pauty to look out of their stateroom windows, the most conspicuous object in view would be Rockhead Prison. Where the city was, or what it looked like, they could not tell. Nor could they observe any of the evidence of the fortifications which make Halifax one of the most strongly fortified positions of North America. At the same time, it is not doubted that Germany, judging from togolar and provided that Germany, indeping from the doubted that Germany, indeping from the content of the city was, or what it looked like, they could not tell. But a very disquieting report soon received a wide circulation to the effect that a document, believed to have been contained in this trunk, had reached the government in Washington and had been found to contain a scheme for uniting Mexico and Japan in war against the United States. The report was distrusted by many as a mild rumor, distrusted by many as a mild rumor, such as is apt to arise when the popular feeling is in a state of tension. But the doubt of its correctness was dispelled by a statement made on the floor of the Senate upon the authority of President Wilson. The document bears the imprimatur of Zimmerman, German Minister of War, and its contents were to be broached to Carranza "as soon as it is certain there will he an outbreak of war with the United."
