BEING A CHRISTIAN.

It is not easy to be a man, a true, noble, Christian man. It means continual struggle, for enemies of manliness meet us at every step. Every inch of the way must be won in battle. It means constant restraint and repression; for the old man in us must be subdued and kept under by the new man we have resolved to be. It means constant, painful discipline, for the powers of nature are unruly and hard to tame and control. It means unending toil and self-denial, for we must climb ever upward, the way is steep and rugged, and self must be trampled to death under our feet as we rise to higher life. It is hard to be a man, for all the odds seem against us. But Christ lives, and he is Helper, Friend and Guide to every man who will accept him.—Forward.

SLEEP ON IT.

Daniel Webster used to say of a difficult question: "Let me sleep on it." It was not merely for morning vigor, but to get the matter at a distance where he could measure its proportions and see its relations. So it is well at times to get away from our world—companions, actions, work—in order to measure it and ascertain our relations to it. The moral use of the night is in the isolation it brings, shutting out the world from the senses, that it may be realized in thought.

It is very simple advice, but worth heeding. Get some moments each day to yourself; take now and then a solitary walk; get into the silence of thick woods, or some other isolation as deep, and suffer the mysterious sense of self hood to steal upon you, as it surely will. Pythagoras insisted upon an hour of solitude every day, to meet his own mind and learn what oracle it had to impart.—On the Threshold.
