

MICHAEL PATRICK RYAN, M. P.

Canadian representation in the Dominion Cabinet, and "No Irish need apply" is the rule with both political parties in the formation of cabinets from the Quebec section, not if the aspirant combined the genius and talent requisite to place Canada at the head of the nations. That cast-iron rule crushed out D'Arcy McGee himself from official life, and the day that dawned on Canadian confederation, as effectively wiped out the Irish Catholic and his descendants in the Province of Quebec, from the race for position in the Cabinet Councils of the Dominion, as they were debarred from all offices of honor and emolument under the penal laws of Ireland. Time that cures all evils or more likely political complications may remove this serious impediment, but for the time being there seems to be no help for this glaring ostracism, and the Irish Catholic
