

Excellency, praying that he would cause to be laid before the House, at as early a date as possible, a detailed account, showing the amount of the crown revenues from the 1st of January, 1829, to the 1st of January, 1833, particularizing the amount received each year; also a statement of the salaries of all the public officers paid from the crown revenues. To this the Lieutenant-Governor replied, expressing his regret that he did not consider himself to have authority to furnish accounts embracing a period so long elapsed, but that he would furnish the House of Assembly with returns of the receipts and expenditures for the year 1832, as he had done for the year 1831. A day or two later, a despatch from Lord Goderich was laid before the House of Assembly by the Lieutenant-Governor, in which he acknowledged the receipt of their despatch, proposing to assume the expenses of the civil list of the Province on the relinquishment by the Crown of the territorial revenues. The reply to this was, that his Majesty did not consider it necessary at present to call upon the House for a grant of the nature proposed, as he did not anticipate such a falling off in the revenue at his disposal as the House appeared to have apprehended. This was a sarcastic way of informing the House of Assembly that no change was to be made in the management of the casual and territorial revenues of the Province.

Sir Archibald Campbell, at a later day during this session, laid before the House an account of the casual and territorial revenue for 1832. From this account it appeared that there was a
