Where public ownership gets a fair chance, as in the postoffice, or in the telegraph system in Great Britain and Ireland, or in the many great municipal services in the same kingdoms, gas, water, harbors, street cars, their success is unprecedented, and in proportion to the degree to which business principles are employed.

In Toronto we are striving towards public ownership. The control of municipal services by a city council may be public ownership in the view of enemies of public ownership, but it is the overture than the ushers would public ownership without business notice that the man was asleep. At spirit, and that is foredoomed to yield unsatisfactory results. When business tactics are adopted and results are required there is no hesitation in deciding upon the best way to attain them. The plan of administration by commission has stood the test everywhere. It is right for the street cars. It would be right for the whole budget of city business.

Why not begin to advertise now? Some day, in all probability, either your own judgment or the stress of competition will induce you to call in the advertising doctor. You are losing valuable time in putting it off. Commercial history is being made in Canada to-day at a tremendous pace. The firms who have been making public opinion in their favor through the newspapers during the years gone by are reaping rich rewards to-day.
