Open. High. Low. Close.

Price Current says: The growing wheat has made satisfactory progress, and continues to give favorable promise. The appearance of the fields seems to have improved with the progress of the season. In some sections it is reported as better than earlier expectations seemed to warrant. In the western section, where it has been dry, there appears to have been sufficient subsoil moisture to maintain the plant without notable impairment of the outlook. The continuous rain in Ohio and Illinois, and to some extent in Missouri, has reduced oats seeding and the preparation of the ground for corn planting. This work has made some progress, but in many sections the rains have interrupted farmers and considerable oats seeding remains undone.
