REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE

Family Entered a Cyclone's Vortex and Lived Through It

The sky became so dark that many people had to light their lamps. The atmosphere took on a strange purple hue, while a strong wind swept across the river, carrying branches of cypress and sycamore from a distant swamp. A moment more and a gigantic funnel-shaped black cloud leaped the river and tore its way through the swamp, moving down immense trees as if they were straws, and striking out large two-story frame buildings with full force. We were seated in the large entrance hall in the centre of the building when the first whirl of the cyclone caught us. It took our breath and swept us into the rear hall. Outside, bricks, timbers and branches of trees were being hurled about with terrific force. We stood for a few seconds listening to the roar of the storm and the crashing of timbers. Our four large brick chimneys fell with a crash. Then we were enveloped in a dead calm—not a sigh, not a breath of air, just a suffocating silence beyond all description. Just a few seconds of this calm in the vortex of the cyclone, although it seemed like hours, when we were caught in a second whirl of the cloud. The entire front of the house was carried away, the room and the second-floor ceiling removed and completely demolished, and the interior of the first floor wrenched and twisted, partitions torn down, and ready to collapse at any moment, ceiling and floors hanging by only one beam, every window shattered, stairs torn loose at top and bottom, and the whole house on the verge of collapsing. All this occurred in less than three minutes, and we made our way out rejoicing that we were unharmed. Hundreds were killed in that cyclone—Farm and Fireless.

Toronto Tribute To New Brunswick's Next Premier

A Big Business Man—One of Merchant Princes of St. John — Energetic, Cultured, and Dependable

(W. A. Crook in Toronto Star Weekly) Following his marriage to Miss Vassie, Mr. Foster, then a young man of twenty-five, was taken into the Vassie firm, and on the death of Mr. Vassie, soon after, he became vice-president and managing director. Under his care and direction the business has enjoyed considerable expansion, and it is today one of the largest establishments of its kind in the maritime provinces, with customers in all three provinces. It is not an uninteresting note that Mr. Foster is a railway president. In the maritime provinces, and especially in New Brunswick, there are still quite a number of independent lines. One of these has already been mentioned, that connecting the town of Hampton with St. Martins. It is only a few miles in length, and its equipment consists of a single locomotive and two or three cars, but it has a place in the list of Canadian railroads. Mr. Foster and a few of his friends bought it out, and Mr. Foster became president of the new company. Doubtless in time it will be absorbed in the government system of railways, but until then its president can take rank with Lord Shaftesbury, Sir William Mackenzie, et al., as one of the railway magnates of the country. It is, of course, well known among his friends that Mr. Foster has been nursing political aspirations for some time. He was a candidate in St. John in the provincial elections of 1914, and, though defeated, headed the Liberal ticket in the city. Whether he will be content with his present achievement or will but use it later on as a stepping-stone to higher preferment remains to be seen. In many respects he is a new type in active political life, and it will be interesting to see how his business training and business instincts will make themselves felt in the government of the province.

St. John's Young Man New Brunswick's premier—he came originally from the little village of St. Martins, which, as those are aware who have occasion to travel over the old-fashioned one-horse railway from Hampton to St. Martins, is one of the most picturesque, out-of-the-way spots in the bay shore. It has been for many years a lumbering centre, and in the management of a large lumbering business Mr. Foster's father was engaged when his son was born. The date of his birth was April 9, 1874, so that he is now in his forty-third year, making him the youngest of the provincial premier. At the age of fifteen Mr. Foster entered the employ of the Bank of New Brunswick in St. John as a junior. This bank, which was absorbed by the Bank of Nova Scotia a few years ago, was then a purely local institution, but already venerable in years, very strong in the character of its service. Its clerical naturally occupied a good position, and Mr. Foster, who is now attached to the bank, was engaged to Miss Vassie, daughter of the late William Vassie, and one of the best of the city. Mr. Foster had been for many years associated with the business interests of St. John, and his father was head of the wholesale dry goods firm of Vassie & Co., which dated back to the early years of the last century.

NEWS OF THE SOLDIERS

Another Toronto Battalion will likely arrive in this city in the near future. It is the 204th battalion, under the command of Lt.-Colonel Price, and is known in Toronto as the "Beavers." It has a strength of about 100 men. Word reached the city yesterday that Sergeant James McCarthy has been recommended for a commission and would take a course to qualify for his new rank. Mr. McCarthy enlisted as a private in the 4th C. M. R. He has been through the heavy fighting, in which that unit suffered heavy casualties. He was severely wounded in the battle of Ypres.

Captain F. F. May of the 28th Battalion delivered an address on Tuesday afternoon before the officers of the 198th battalion. A part of the address which proved most interesting was the description of the movements and activities demanded in the taking over of a front line trench.

The names of five New Brunswick men appear in the midnight casualty list: Killed in action, Harry Arsenault, Lower Neguac; wounded, O. J. Jones, River Glade, and E. L. Gilks, Docktown; dangerously ill, Kenneth West, West Falls; seriously ill, Lieutenant J. A. Winslow, Fredericton.

Eight recruits were secured in the city yesterday: Harold Clyde, West St. John; F. Clarke, Fredericton; S. Boyd, Fredericton; N. S. Slings, Bathurst; Harry Harding, St. Martins; Machine Gun Section; Bruce W. Palmer, Charles Steele, James Miller and Daniel McKenzie, St. John, Army Service Corps.

Three hundred members of the 198th Canadian Buffs Battalion were given a reception at the Y. M. C. A. last night by the executive staff and assisted by the West Side Field Comforts' Association. The evening was spent in music and games of various kinds.
