A Rome letter says the Pope is again in excellent health and spirits. He takes open air exercise in fine weather, in the Vatican gardens; in rainy weather he walks through the long Logglas and Stanzas of Raphael. The library halls of the Vatican are also favorite daily resorts of the Pope. Every day he spends an hour or two there in conversation with the learned clergy and his councillors.

Gidadstone to retire now, when his prestigand his influence is at the highest, than to remain and risk a possible fall in the future. The Liberal cause is so firmly established that it cannot fall.

England is essentially a Whig country, that is, in the great middle class and shopkeeping class, which is the great power. Even the Conservatives of England are Liberal at heart, and, on the other hand, the Liberals are Conservative at heart. In other words, there are no essential differences of faith in the real opinions of the vast body of Englishmen. I remember a case where two gentlemen, both good friends of mine, were the opposing candidates for a seat in Parliament. One styled himself a Liberal Conservative Liberal, and that, really, is about all the difference that there is between the parties in England. In this case it is a fact that the Liberal Conservative address to the electors was the more Liberal, and the Conservative Liberal's was the more Conservative of the two.
