farm hands to absent himself for the time being, and unless the parcels to be brought home are of a very heavy and bulky nature the bicycle is capable of doing the work quickly and cheaply.

Considering its size, it is surprising what an amount of material can be hung on a bicycle.

Like other implements, the bicycle needs ordinary care and should be kept free from rust, should be oiled regularly, and not exposed to the weather when not in actual use. When it is stored away for the winter, a good plan is to give it a coat of vaseline all over, which, when removed in the spring, will leave the machine as good as ever. When it is stored for any length of time it is advisable to have it slung or else stood upside down so that the tires are not subject to the weight of the machine.

The Sheltering of Pigs

Feeds and feeding are a matter of careful study these days when the raising of stock is essentially in such urgent demand to supply the deficiencies the world over caused by the past four years of devastation. In addition to the matter of feeding, there is another matter of importance and by its management or mismanagement the effects of a carefully planned system of feeding will be enhanced or defeated. The latter point is covered by housing.

Suitable housing does not necessarily mean expensively constructed houses or pens which may lack some very necessary points in spite of their elaborate design. For instance, the pig barn may give the roof without perpendicular walls and each end should form a perfect triangle, the floor and sides being eight feet each. Good strong sills should be provided in order that the pens may be moved by a team at any time and the ends of the sills are better to be rounded off to form runners. A ring or clevis should be fixed to either end for the purpose of hooking on a team. A doorway cut to about halfway up to the peak of the roof is about sufficient. When these pens are faced south in the winter and well banked up with straw the pigs have fresh air and comfort and enjoy a state of health that probably would not be attained in many a more expensively built pen. Some very satisfactory results have already been obtained by the use of these pens, and in these days of expensive building material such a method of sheltering pigs should find favor among the farmers who are going in for hog raising on the most efficient economical lines.

The Health of the Bees

In order to prevent infectious diseases getting among your bees and subsequently spreading, it is necessary to know the means by which it spreads. The chief means by which bee diseases are spread is the honey.

The feeding of bees from honey from other apiaries is a danger unless the bee keeper knows that such apiaries are free from foul brood. The purchasing of honey of unknown origin for the purpose of feeding bees should be strictly avoided.

Another feature to be guarded against is robbing. A colony may become weak owner good satisfaction as soon as it is put into operation inasmuch as it appears to be "good and warm," but after a while the pigs may not appear to be in such a thrifty and vigorous condition as one would wish. These unsatisfactory symptoms are the result of stale air and lack of exercise. The pigs form a habit of getting up from their bed and after eating their meal which has come to them through the trap door and come very easily at that, as it has entailed no effort on their part, they return to their corner in a listless state, and, like many humans who have stayed indoors for days on end, feel less and less inclined to get out in the air and take the necessary exercise to stimulate their digestion. Such a mode of existence will bring in its train indigestion and constipation to the detriment of the subsequent litters.

For brood sows due to farrow in the late winter or early spring months, an ideal shelter is the moveable cabin. Such shelters can be ranged side by side in a convenient place in the barnyard. They can be made to accommodate four or five sows.

The moveable pen as described above may be used as a shade in summer and a shelter from the cold in winter. The summer location should be dry and airy so that the pigs using it may be free from any oppressiveness that can be avoided in the hot weather. They can be used to excellent advantage in hog pastures in the summer time, for they are very easily moved. In winter a sheltered spot should be chosen if possible to avoid exposure to severe winds, and it is a good plan to throw straw as a banking up the sides.

These pens are made V-shaped like a and in consequence liable to be robbed. The robber bees should they be from an infected apiary will be the means of starting disease in your colony. Such an event should be guarded against as much as possible and it should be planned to keep the colonies up to a strength that will discourage robbers. Should a colony get weak and it is found practically impossible to reinforce it, the entrance should be contracted.

In buying second hand supplies for the apiary, be sure that the apiary from which they come is free from infectious diseases, otherwise there is danger introducing infection among the bees of a healthy apiary.

Care of the Water Supply

The location of the well is of great importance as it should be kept guarded from contaminating influences. By enclosing the well in a small area around the top, animals can be kept from it and thus it will be protected from the pollution that farm animals are capable of bringing to it. The location of a well should be on a slope above the stable or barn and not less than 200 feet from such buildings. The well has such an influence on the health and convenience of the household, that careful planning is well worth while. For the convenience of watering stock when a well is fenced off to keep out all animals, the water should be run through a pipe about 40 feet in length to a trough that distance from the well as a watering trough gets surrounded by mud holes and the soil becomes polluted by manure.

The well cover should receive special consideration and while it is in course of construction it is well to see that it is

Had Fainting Spells.

TOOK AWFUL FALLS.

Miss Eva P. Yatsman, Krugersdorf, Ont., writes:—"I feel that I must write and tell you of the great benefit I have received from Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills."

About three and a half years ago I was taken terribly bad with my heart, nervous and fainting spells, and was down in bed for about six months. I doctored with two different doctors and seemed to get better although the fainting spells would not leave me. I would take such terrible falls wherever I was that it was not safe to leave me alone at any time. At last I decided to resort to proprietary medicine and took several different kinds, but seemed to receive but little benefit from any of them. One day noticing the advertisement of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, I decided to try them and before I had taken more than two boxes I could see they were helping me. I have taken about ten boxes and am almost cured of those terrible spells. I sincerely feel that your medicine has proved a blessing to me, and I would advise anyone troubled with their heart to try it as I am confident they will find relief."
