SPORT-LITES

Kid Gavilan, dealer in flesh, leather and melody, has thoroughly cleaned up on the welterweight division and thinks he may have to move up to the middle-weights to keep busy.

With Sugar Ray Robinson out of the way, what can he lose?
"I can whip all the welterweights around," says the champion bluntly. "I mash 'em up like spaghetti mush."

The clever Cuban already has middle-weight Joey Giardello lined up, and after that? "Who knows," remarks Gavilan. "It depends on who is the middleweight champion."

Against Chuck Davey, the champion clearly demonstrated how far he outstrips the 147-pounders. Just why Davey thought he could do what guys like Billy Graham, Gil Turner and Bobby Dykes couldn't do it's hard to say. It goes to show you that even students with Master's Degrees learn something new every day.

"He's a lot tougher than I expected," testified Davey. "His style is baffling and hard to figure out."

In stashing away his 27th bout without defeat, 13th victory in a row since Johnny Bratton held him to a draw, Nov. 28, 1951, Gavilan proved that what he lacks in boxing finesse he makes up in ring craft, guileful strategy and subtle surprise moves.

When the sleek operator from the sugar cane fields of Camaguey suddenly switched southpaw for two rounds, it completely confused southpaw Davey, who hadn't lost a match in 40 professional fights. Asked why the change in tactics, Gavilan grinned, "I just wanted to show him I could fight southpaw, too."

One never knows when the Kid is playing possum. He stalks his quarry as a jaguar shadows its prey. He feigns grogginess only to ambush an unsuspecting foe with a lethal punch to the wind or the jaw.

Gavilan generally lets his opponents set the pace. He's a whimsical mixture of sentimental softness and flinty hardness, gentle with those opponents he doesn't particularly have anything against, vindictive as an Apache Indian when stalking a foe he hates. Obviously he must have liked Davey, because there were those who thought he could have finished off the college boy much sooner than he did.

STUKUS SET FOR JOB

Vancouver, B.C.—Annis Stukus, possibly Canada's most colorful home-grown football figure, flew back to Toronto last week but from all indications he will return in a few weeks to build the Vancouver entry in the western football conference in 1954.

It's not official but Stukus has impressed Vancouver and Vancouver can't think of a man who could do a better job than Stukus of promoting the game while also coaching and managing the team.

Stukus met the executive privately at noon yesterday and apparently his terms were thrashed out. Club executives refused to comment, but observers claimed Stukus asked for a three-year contract calling for $10,000 in the first year, $11,000 in the second and $12,000 in the third.

If Stukus actually signed, the official announcement is expected during the second week of March after the big man has squared away his affairs with the Toronto newspaper for which he works (The Star).
