thrown into the greatest excitement by this event and finally flew away. The female, however, remained on the nest and continued to care for the changing as though it were her own offspring.

On the morning of the fourth day the male reappeared accompanied by nearly 500 storks, which held a mass meeting in an adjacent field. The assembly, we are informed, was addressed by several speakers, each orator posting himself on the same spot before beginning his harangue.

These deliberations and discussions occupied nearly the entire forenoon, when suddenly the meeting broke up and all the storks pounced upon the unfortunate female and her supposititious young one, killed them both and, after destroying the polluted nest, took wing and departed and were never seen there again.

The Elephant's Joke.

An elegant elephant sat on his trunk. He was going away for the season; and he laughed and he laughed till I certainly thought He must laugh for some excellent reason.

To attract his attention I uttered a sneeze. He paused in his merriment slightly; I said, "Tell me why, Mr. Elephant, please, You are laughing so long and so lightly."

He borrowed my kerchief to dry up his tears. Then he wrung out the kerchief politely. And said, with a wag of his wonderful ears, "I'm laughing so long and so lightly."

"Because," then he burst out a laughing again. Till he trembled with ill-suppressed glee. And I stood there impatient to hear the great joke. For jokes are most pleasing to me.

I gave a loud "hem" and the elephant choked. Then swallowed a giggle or two. "Excuse me," he said, "I am laughing because— Indeed, I'm not laughing at you— "But you two-legged mortals con-vulse me with glee."

They Are Pickwickian.

Chicago, July 11.—Dr. George Dorsey, of the Field Columbian Museum, has made a discovery in his investigations among the Hopi Indians that overturns many of the old theories of anthropologists in regard to supposed inscriptions on the adobe houses of the tribe. In a lecture to the students of the University of Chicago he announced that these inscriptions that the anthropologists have been trying to decipher for years have been found to be nothing more than the scratches made by mischievous Hopi children in the mud adobe houses after they have been freshly built.

"Whither away?" called the inquisitive man after an acquaintance who was hurrying down the street. "To the coronation," answered the hurried one, as he checked his speed for a minute. "What?" exclaimed the human interrogation point. "Not to England?" "Oh, no," replied the other, as he started to get up steam again, "only to the dental emporium to have a tooth crowned."

Storks Are Queer Creatures

The owner of a house near Berlin found a single egg in the nest of a pair of storks built on the chimney and substituted for it a goose's egg, which in due time was hatched and produced a gosling instead of the expected storkling. The male bird was
