—There seems to be no insurmountable obstacle in the way of the proposed line of pneumatic tubes between London and Paris for mail purposes. The distance is 475 miles. The double line will follow the railroad tracks on both sides of the channel, and be sunk under the sea between Dover and Calais, or Folkstone and Boulogne. It is expected that London letters can be delivered in Paris in one hour from the time of mailing, and the gain of time is regarded of quite sufficient importance to warrant the outlay. The cost of the enterprise is placed at about £1,400,000.
