The events in the last act of the tariff drama tollow each other in rapid succession. It is not generally known to what an extent Speaker Crisp played the star part in the preliminaries to the famous deciding caucus of the House on Monday. Speaker Crisp was from the first_anxions to see some tariff legislation enacted. In the first caucus of the House Democrats he gave notice that when the situation had unrrowed down to the Senate bill or nothing he would convene the members of his party. He became convinced last Saturday, although he had been steadfastly upholding the Wilson bill, that the expected crisis had arrived. Unwilling to see tariff legislation tinally and signally defeated, he first conferred with the House managers and then sought the Senators who had the guidance of the bill and discussed the situation. The conference was participated in by Senators Jones, Vest, Harris, Gorman, Murphy, Brice, and others Mr. Crisp's opinion as to the narrow thread by which the tariff bill was then suspended over oblivion was confirmed by the assertions made to him by the Senators. If he has a sore throat the whole world knows it; if he plays a game of cards, everybody wants to know why he does it. It must be a strange feeling, if the President ever stops to think of it, to know that there are sixty millions of opinions about you. We concern ourselves a good deal to know what friends or neighbors are saying and thinking about us, but if the President were to have a similar solicitude, he would go crazy at once from the very immensity of the subject. Yet Presidents have to think of themselves sometimes, and it is when overwork has become so unbearable that they realize that some slight able that they realize that some slight rest is necessary or there will be a crash that they take a socalled vacation.

When he 'gets tired of this he likes to get into a yacht and go out to sea, where no one can reach him. It is the only way he has of getting rid of office seekers. For they follow bim out to his place on Woodley Lane near Washington, they swarm about the White House, they even penetraic his retirement at 'Gray Gables'. But they have not yet taken to hiving tug boats or pilot cloops to follow the President when he goes to sea.

In fact, the only real relaxation that a President gets are the rare occasions when he goes beyond the reach of the telegraph and mail, but this he seldom dares to do for more than a day or so at a filme. President Cleveland manages this by his see a trips; President Harrison never managed it at all, and President Arthur.
