It is not to be doubted that in be coming man for the redemption of the world Christ was free to make choice of a mother; and it was meet that the sublime honor of the divine maternity should be bestowed upon the highest, boliest, purest and best That favored being war the Blessed Virgin Mery, venerated, invoked and loved by every generation of Christians as the mother of the world's Redeemer. The Gospel relates that the Magi, our forefathers in the faith, were led from the distant East by the light of a miraculous star, which stood over the midnight cave in Bethlehem of Juda. "And they found the child, with Mary His Mother; and, falling down, they adored Him." Through her their gifts were offered. She was their helper in glorifying God and rendering homage to the infant Messias. And when His work on earth was accomplished and Christ ascended into heaven, He left His Mother nation; to guide and guard the little company of His Church, destined, after her exile was ended, to spread to the uttermost confines of the earth. While the disciples were waiting in Jerusalem for the coming of the Spirit of Fortitude, the Blessed Virgin was present, that faith might not fail again nor charity grow cold. As we read in the Acts of the Apostles, "They were all persevering in prayer with Mary, the Mother of H. Review.

Mr. Laurier then went on to say that he never appealed to Rome on political questions, but desired they should be settled by Canadians. Mr. mier and his supporters had professed to be friends of the minority, and had betrayed them; they had professed since then to have adopted the policy o the other side, and had betrayed them Casey and McNeil. Sir Adolphe Caron said the Ganadian Catholics had a right to appeal for direction matters, and no one should dictate to them as to the manner of their appeal.

The difficulty was that the premier and his followers had been trying to blow hot and cold, condemning coercion before the Protestant audiences and assuring Catholics that the bill did not go far enough. Whatever might be said about the policy of the late government it was embodied in a definite measure which meant the same thing amon

By the first day of January next he expects that the department would be self sustaining, even without newspaper postage. By imposing this newspaper postage it would be possible to reduce the letter rate to two cents without incurring so large a deficit as that of late years. Sir Charles Tupper asked what was the government's in tention in respect to imperial postage and referred to Mr. Mulock's proclams asked to tell state secrets, as imperial egotiations were going on. Sir Charles Tupper maintained that so far as the government policy affected the revenue parliament ought to be informed about it. Hon. Mr. Mulock flew into a rage and accused the opposition of trying to obstruct the great imperial projects of the government. After some sharp exchanges of repartee Mr. Mulock concluded to discuss the subject moderat ly, having been assured that he would not get along with his measures very rapidly if he did not exhibit bette temper.-Six o'clock. After dinner Sir Charles Tupper offered some reflections on Mr. Mulook's speech.
