THE JOURNEY SOUTHWARD—THE LUNATIO

ASTICM—A MERTING OF PHIRNDS

"Ha, George, here you are at last," he cried. "I was beginning to despair of your coming, and was persuading myself that you had not got my letter."

"I opened it only yesterday morning," answered George, as he warmly shook his friend's hand.

"Only then? Ah, it was late in being delivered. It should have been at Ardgowan four or five days ago."

"And so it was, I believe, but I quitted Ardgowan mansion six days ago."

"Whew—tired and diagusted—vulgar people—didn't know how to treat a gentleman. I see. You did well to leave. Back to Edinburgh, I suppose. How are Harry and your sister? Happy, of course, as the day is long. Lucky dog, how I envey him."

"Pray, don't go on so fast, Manby, my vey him."

" Fray, don't go on so fast, Manby, my dear fellow," smiled George. "I have not returned to Edinburgh. I have come direct from Glenfask, and intend seturning thither," "Oh, indeed. Taken another appointing thither,"

"Oh, indeed. Taken another appointment?"

"No. The fact is, I have another story to tell you, which may interest you as much as the one I related on our journey through Fife."

"Impossible!" ejaculated Manby, opening his eyes very wide.

"Well, you can judge for yourself when you hear it. What would you think now if a man same to you, and, in serious earnestness, told you that he had been murdered?"

"Think!" repeated the doctor, "I would think that it was high time he was an inmate of this place."

"And no doubt if your power extended so far your would have him soized forthwith, and transported hither?"

"Most certainly."

"Most certainly."

"There now. What danger we are all in from you lunacy doctors. What you take to be a manifestation of insanity may be the utterance of truth and really, and on the strength of your mistake a sane man may be deprived of his liberty, and subjected to such treatment as would drive him mad."

"Nonsense. The signs of insanity are various—we judge of them as a whole, and are not at all likely to be mistaken."

"But you told me just now that if a man seriously made the statement I mentioned you would pronounce him instanc."

man seriously made the statement I montioned you would pronounce him ins ane."

"Unquestionately; though I should as certainly find other symptons in such a case. But what are you driving at? Have you made the acquaintance of any person who declares they have been murdered? Did one of your fellow-passengers regale you with such a pleasant statement?"

"No; but I am going to resale you with it now. My dear fellow, I have been murdered."

"Have you, indeed? Come, come, that is rather a grim joke. You have fasted too long. Mrs. Curtis will bring in dinner prosently, and then—"

"And then," interrupted George, with another smile, "the adage will be confirmed that 'Murder will out.' Positively, Lister, I was murdered the night before last. How, where, and by whom, you shall learn after dinner, lost I spoil both your appetite and my own. Meanwhile allay my anxiety by telling me of Walley. I know! an mot too last, for I asked the porter, the urgency of you summons having made me fearful."

"No; I am glad to know you are in time. He may remain for a day or two longer in the state in which he now is, but I confidently expect a return to intelligence. I am watching the sase with intense interest—on professional interest and on your account. He won't live, his system has received such a shock, but ere he dies the mental balance will likely return, and then he will be able to tell you what you long to know."

"How my soul is stirred at the thought of that." said George with flushed cheel.

be able to tell you what you long to know."

'How my soul is stirred at the thought of that," said George, with flushed check and sparkling eye.

"As well it may," returned Manby, kindly. "What can have more interest for a man than the revelation of his parentage? I have reflected on your strange story again and again, and each time with increased wonder and curiosity. My anxiety as to what Walley will reveal is second only to your own."

"Thanks," replied George, who fully appreciated the warmth of the other's friendship. "If I have been deprived of my family," he added, "I am rich in friends. Herry and youself are more to me than a host of blood relations."

"For all that you must yearn to know the root whence you spring."

"I do indeed," replied George. "But perchance in this matter I am to be doomed to disappointment. Even should reacon return to Walley his memory may ed to disappointment. Even should rea-con return to Walley his memory may fail to assert itself after twenty year's ob-con roturn to Walley his memory may fail to assert itself after twenty year's oblivion."

"Have no fear of that. These twenty years are an utter blank to him. If intelligence returns it will be at the point where it was lost. Nay, the circumstances of the shipwreek seem to have hovered round his shrouded soul all along as shown by his persistent passion for bending and crouching over a child. We thought we had got him weaned from the feeling; but no, the moment he made his escape he seized the first child which came in his way, fled with it to the beach and sat with it on his knee all the night upon the rocks, precisely as he had sat with you through the terrible night of the wreck."

"You think, then," said George, "that if reason returns, all the past up to the time of the catastrophe will be rememberered by him?"

"With perfect distinctiveness. What else has reason to operate upon but his former experiences?"

"True," rejoined George, satisfied now on this point; and just then the doctor's house-keeper entered with dinner, and the conversation was broken off.

TER-CENTENARY OF JOHN KNOX.—The Tuesday evening was the grand featur of the Hamilton celebration of the Knox Ter-centenary. All the available space in the Church was occupied by people, who manifested their interest by gathering at the church door long before the hour of opening, which was half-past seven. The spacious edifice was unable to accommodate all who desired to attend. The pulpit and walls were decorated with texts and the names of noted Protestant reformers, those of Knox, Luther, Calvin, Wyeliffe, and Huss, being most prominent. The chair was occupied by Hon, Isaac Buchanan. Able addresses were given by the chairman, Rev. Mr. J. Macdonell, Prof. Cavan, Hon. Alex. Mackenzie, Rev. Mr. Pierson, of Detroit, Rev. Dr. Jenkins, of Montreal and others. of the Hamilton celebration of the Knor

CASH

TREMENDOUS SUCCESS!

Ready Pay Principle Victorious!

THE NEW STORE

"CASH" is now doing Double the Amount of Trade for Ready Pay that any Credit Establishment in Guelph is doing. WHY?

Because for Ready Pay a small profit only is asked, the money is turned over five times when Ready Pay is made, but the credit system entails an extra per centage added in marking goods, in order to guard against bad debts. The man who gives credit cannot buy his goods as well as the man who does not.

VITTALL ON I WINKS

Because he has to buy his stock on credit, and is thereby deprived of the large saving to be made by buying for cash, but the man who sells for ready pay has the money in hand when he goes to market, and can take every benefit that the trade will ofer.

Such being the case, who can wonder at he great rush there is going on at present at the new store. "CASH" is creating quite a panic among the slope coaches who have been living at their ease on large profits, and he is now going to make a shaking among the dry bones.

Hurry up with your money. Don't forget the spot.
