

ANNABEL

THE TEMPTATION.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

WHAT BEVEL JIM POTT.

To say that Jim felt no sinking of heart when he returned to the full consciousness of his situation would be untrue.

The next operation Jim noticed was to him an ominous one. A stout stake was driven firmly into the ground, amid yells of savage delight, and so soon as it was fixed, a group of the strongest Indians carried him towards it, while the entire population of the village gathered round in a circle, shouting and whooping after the wildest Indian fashion.

"Well," thought Jim, "it ain't like a high-spirited Englishman to stand tame and give no blow when he has the chance. I'll floor one or two of them, at any rate."

This thought, with the action that followed it, was simultaneous for with lightning-like rapidity he clenched his two hands, and hit out right and left with a force which caused the two savages who received the blow to drop like felled oxen.

Other and stronger things were now brought, and there he was bound in a standing position to the stake, with his face fronting the sun, so that its bright rays dazzled his eyes.

The entire population of the village gathered round in a circle to gratify their savage natures by beholding and taking part in the shocking cruelties which were now to be perpetrated on the body of poor Jim; to behold with fendish joy the agonies of the victim under the tortures which their barbarous ingenuity should inflict; to see him writhe and shudder, perchance to hear his groans, which would sound as music in their ears.

Jim now fully understood the frightful process of torture to which he was to be subjected. It was a part of their gratification to reveal it to him, so that the pain of anticipation might go to increase the sum total of the suffering.

Remarking on a statement made in Mr McMullen's letter that the Montreal Gazette is one of those who sold their influence to Sir Hugh Allan, at a price of its own naming, the London Advertiser says:—This last piece of information accounts for the desperate zeal displayed by that paper in urging the abandonment of the investigation and declaring that there was never any necessity for it.

A sad accident occurred at Port Elgin, on Monday evening about 8 o'clock. Several boys went into the Mill creek to bathe, when one of them, named Levi Musselman, about nineteen years old, was drowned.

BREAKFAST.—EPPE'S COCOA.—GRATEFUL AND COMFORTING.—By sufficient knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Eppe has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills.

The carpenters of London, England, threaten to go into strike on Saturday next if their demand for increase of wages be not complied with.

MANUFACTURE OF COCOA.—We will now give an account of the process adopted by Messrs. James Eppe & Co., manufacturers of dietetic articles, at their works in the Easton Road, London.—See article in Cassell's Household Guide. J206mdw
