THE BEAUTIFUL SNOW.

An ardent young lover with delight, maiden beside him, a moon-beaming night. A pair of young horses all eager to go. With jingle and rattle, O'er the beautiful snow.

"To-night shall determine," the lover quoth he, "How deep is the love of this maiden for me; and boundless bliss I shall presently know, As swiftly we glide."

Alas for the hopes that are doomed to depart. For sweet expectation, for fervent young heart! Alas for the blast of that bitter night's blow! Alas for the child Of the beautiful's "No!"

PROFESSOR PAUL.

The Story of a Life's Love.

(By Stuart Livingston, Barrister, Hamilton.)

"As Winnie was at home every afternoon I always spent that time in the fields engaged with my painting, and upon my return, as soon as the evening meal was over, I at once retired to my studio, and occupied myself in preparing my materials for the next day. And so the days passed by, and at length my sketch was completed, to-morrow I would bid good-bye to village life and Winnie."

"I told my aunt at the dinner-table of my intention, and then went into the fields to visit my old haunts for the last time. When I returned home they were waiting tea for me and as soon as it was over I went at once to my studio to complete what packing still remained to be done."

"Do you know, my friend, I had said each day to myself, 'It will be a good day for you, Paul, when you are in Paris absorbed in your art, and have forgotten all about this girl; yes, it will be a good day for you when it comes,' and it was now all ready so close at hand and I was sorry. Yes, my friend, when I stood that day for the last time in the little studio where she had so often sat; when I remembered her pretty ways, her many little graces, the pleasant good fellowship with which she had so many times related to me her story of village news, I felt more than sorry; I felt a great dread of darkness that would be mine, when the bright little ray of sunlight, which had crept so graciously into my life, should die out of it for ever."

"In looking over my sketches I found one which could scarcely be called completed, and had just sat down to put a few finishing touches upon it, when I heard a timid little knock at my studio door."

"Indeed it was so faint that I was not quite sure I had not been mistaken. It was repeated, however, and I called out: 'Come in.'"

"The door opened slowly and a slight figure in a very flowing and dark red gown slipped noiselessly into the room. It was Winnie; there couldn't be any mistake about that, though I could hardly believe it. As she stood there a few steps from the door, her cheeks were very red, and her eyes were cast upon the floor."

"What could it mean?" "I said nothing but turned to my easel and continued touching up my sketch."

"Presently a very tremulous little voice said slowly: 'Aren't you going to speak to me, Paul?'"

"Yes, Winnie, won't you come over here and sit down?" "She came slowly over and seated herself in a large arm-chair close to my easel."

"Now, Winnie, I said something to the matter; what is it? You will tell me all about it, won't you? You know you said once before that it always did you good to tell some one when you were in trouble; won't you confide in me?"

"The tears had begun to roll slowly one by one down her cheeks, and it was a very choked little voice that spoke as she said: 'Oh, Paul, I have been so miserable, so very miserable, ever since that day in the field. I was so unkind to you, and any other girl would have been glad to know you liked her. Oh, I shall never forgive myself; no, I know I never shall.'"

"Her voice choked with sobs, and the tears were rolling rapidly down her cheeks."

you; I thought that you didn't want to see me, that was all."

"But I never said that I didn't want to see you, did I?"

"No, perhaps not but I thought so," and then I added slowly: "Did you want to see me, Winnie?"

"She was silent for a moment; her fingers still continued to work nervously with her handkerchief; her eyes were cast down upon the floor, and her cheeks, which had become pale during her fit of crying, became very red again. Her voice was almost a whisper when she spoke, but it was a whisper which I would have given my life rather than lose what she said."

"Yes I think I did."

"We sat in silence for some moments, and then I spoke."

"I wanted to tell you something that day in the field, but you wouldn't let me, may I tell you now?"

"A little nod was her only reply, and I continued: "It was this, Winnie, I thought that you were the dearest little girl in the world, and that I loved you the most. Winnie, I still love you most. I know I am not worth liking by any girl, and least of all by you; but if you do like me, even if it be only just a little better than any one else, I wish you would tell me so; I wish it very much. Do you, Winnie?"

"She hesitated a moment, and then said: 'I don't know, Paul; I like you as well as any one.'"

Then she added dubiously: "Don't you think it would do if I said I would try and like you best?"

"No, Winnie, I answered, I wouldn't ask you to do that; it wouldn't be for your own good to do it. Perhaps you haven't thought of this enough to know that you rather wait until to-morrow night before you answer me?"

"Yes, Paul," she said eagerly, "I would rather wait I think I would know better then."

"Very well, Winnie," I replied, it shall be as you wish, and I shall expect to see you again to-morrow."

"She rose without replying, and walked slowly over to the door; when she had reached it, however, she stood for a moment as if still in doubt about something, and then turning again towards me said: "And you are quite sure, Paul, that you won't go to-morrow?"

"No, Winnie," I answered, "I will never go if you want me to stay."

"A bright little smile broke over her face lighting up as I had so often seen it before."

"She said quietly, 'You are very good to me, Paul; good-night,' and before I could reply she was gone."

At this point in his narrative, the old man paused for a few moments and then said: "No doubt, my friend, you think I might spare you the weariness of listening to all these details, but I feel sure you will forgive me, when I again remind you that these were almost the only happy days that I have known."

When he had said this he again resumed his narrative.

Peculiarities of the Hair.

There are times when all persons require to pay some particular attention to the hair. To stimulate the life and energy of the roots is a simple matter if taken in time. Dr. Doreen's Great German Hair Magic will do the work. It works in accordance with nature, supplies fresh nourishment to the glands, keeping the hair luxuriant and natural in shade. Be sure to get it; you cannot afford to miss it. Every druggist sells it. It is money well spent. See Doreen's advertisement in another column.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

D. Lothrop & Co., Boston, produce by all odds the finest monthly periodicals for children published in this country. Among others is "The Pansy," a prettily illustrated magazine, which only costs $1 a year. The March number just issued is full of good things.

The spring number of Grip, Canada's comic weekly, will no doubt be much sought after. The cartoons and other pictorial features are excellent, while the jokes and general reading matter are fresh and seasonable.

Littell's Living Age. The numbers of the Living Age for Feb. 22 and March 1 contain a Hanoverian Marriage, Edinburgh; Sir John Hawkwood and the publicans; The Quarterly; The Ascertainment of English, and The Naturalist on the Pampas, Nineteenth Century. In the Days of the Danes, Blackwood; Samuel Richardson, Gentlemen; The Decline of Goethe, and Horace Walpole's Letters, Temple Bar; Holland House, Murray's; Hosts and Guests, Longmans; Ship Canals, and Bungee, Use of Verse, Spectator; Babbage's Calculating Engines, Athenaeum; The Epidemic of Influenza, Nature; With His Uncle and Her Grandmother, and "Epicurus Wyman" and Poetry. For 52 numbers of 64 large pages each (or more than 3,300 pages a year) the subscription price ($8) is low; while for $10 the publisher offers to send any one of the American $4 monthlies or weeklies with The Living Age for a year, both post paid. Littell & Co., Boston, are the publishers.

The Secret of a Long Life.

You sometimes see a woman whose old age is as exquisite as was the perfect bloom of her youth. She seems contented sweetly with her lot. You wonder how this has come about; you wonder how it is her life has been a long and happy one. Here are some of the reasons:

She knew how to forget disagreeable things. She understood the art of enjoyment. She kept her nerves well in hand, and inflicted them on no one. She believed in the goodness of her own daughters and in that of her neighbors. She cultivated a good digestion. She mastered the art of saying pleasant words. She did not expect too much from her friends. She made whatever work came to her congenial. She retained her illusions, and did not believe that all the world was wicked and unkind. She relieved the miserable, and sympathized with the sorrowful. She retained an even disposition, and met the best of every man and woman. She did unto others as she would be done by, and now that old age has come to her and there is a halo of white hair about her head, she is loved and considered. This is the secret of a long life and a happy one.—[March Ladies' Home Journal.]

Constipation.

If not remedied in season, is liable to become habitual and chronic. Drastic purgatives, by weakening the bowels, confirm, rather than cure, the evil. Ayer's Pills, being mild, effective, and strengthening in their action, are generally recommended by the faculty as the best of aperients.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills. I deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived the greatest benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W. Bowman, 20 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"I have been taking Ayer's Pills, and using them in my family since 1857, and they have been recommended to all in need of a safe but effectual cathartic."—John M. Boggs, Louisville, Ky.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in excellent health."—S. L. Loughridge, Bryan, Texas.

"Having used Ayer's Pills, with good results, I fully endorse them for the purpose of restoring the bowels to their natural condition."—T. Conners, M.D., Centre Bridge, Pa.
