while the River Thames was flooded, the young man whose brave conduct has been thus signally rewarded by royal recognition was instrumental in saving the life of a child of Henry Pritchett, Horton street, who had accidentally fallen into the swollen stream. At the risk of his life he dashed into the river and swam to the rescue of the child, afterwards gallantly swimming down stream to the rescue of a younger member of the family, whom he reached too late to save alive.

The praiseworthy deeds of the young man were at once noted by Mr. Hyman, M. P. for the city, who procured the necessary affidavits and made a strong application to the size of the color of the street.
