"Thank you, dear," she said, heartily, "I shall be so glad to have it, and I shall arrange these mosses and lichens on cardboard, and frame and keep them as a souvenir of this day.' Rich flushed with pleasure that she could care enough for his modest gift to take all that trouble. "I wish I had something to give you in return," she added. "You surely deserve a medal for your courage and presence of mind today. I wonder if you could wear this ring," and she drew off a plain gold ring, the guard to a diamond, from one of her fingers and passed it to him. CHAPTER XIII.

When Rich returned home that evening When fich returned home that evening he found Miss Waldemar much better. After he had eaten his supper, he went back to her room and related all that had transpired during the day. Of course, the incident that had happened on the mountain road was the most important of anything to him, and he grew cuits elegant over it. quite eloquent over it. quite eloquent over it.

"And the strangest of all, Aunt Audrey." he said, when he had told her about the snake and the frightened horse, "was that the gentleman seemed to know you."

"To know me! Well, who was he?"
"Mr.-well, I thought I could remember his name; but I have his card some, where. He asked me who I was, and when I told him, he said he used to know some people by the name of Waldemar, and asked if Miss Audrey Waldemar was a relative of mine. I told him you were my aunt. He gave a great start at that, and asked, in a queer tone called him Arthur. Yes, here is the card, and it is such a high-sounding name—Arthur M. Halstead." as she reached forth her hand and took that little piece of pasteboard from him. She read the name—that name which had never passed her lips since the day when she had given him up forever, but which had been treasured—so sacredly ing her heart during all the long years of their senergia.

Then her hand dropped nervelessly upon her lap, and she lay back in her chair, so still that Rich looked up at her won-

'Is your head bad again, Aunt Au-ey?" he asked, frightened at her extreme pallor.
"It does not feel quite right. Please get me some water, Rich," she murmured He sprang to do her bidding, and when he came back with it he found that she had fainted dead away. He called Mrs. Allen in terror, and she was almost as much alarmed as he; but upon applying restoratives, Audrey soon recovered con-sciousness, though she lay for a long time afterward looking very ill and miserable.

Later in the evening she seemed more like aerself, and said to Rich:
"My fainting turn interrupted your story, dear. I want to hear more. Tell me about the lady—describe her to me."
Rich regarded her curiously.
He could not help thinking it strange that the gentleman should have manifested so much emotion upon hearing her name, and that she, too, should have been so overcome upon learning about him. But he answered:
"She had black hair and such lovely

him. But he answered:

"She had black hair and such lovely dark eyes—they were so beautiful, only very sad. Her face was thin and very white, as though she had been sick a long time; and then she had such a sweet, gentle way, and spoke so kindly to me. Aunt Audrey, I think, next to you, she is the lovellest lady I have ever And he-the gentleman-what was he

"And he—the gentleman—what was he like?" Audrey asked, with averted eyes. "He was tall and large, with brown hair and eyes, and very handsome; but he had a kind of grave way that made me a little shy of him, though he was very kind and gentle with his wife."

Audrey's lips quivered and a sigh broke from them, but Rich did not seem to head if had a splendid horse," he went on, with animation. "I think it was the finest one I have ever seen, and he did look so grand when he reared upon his hind legs and pricked up those silky ears of his. But where did you meet this Mr. Halstead, Aunt Audrey?" he suddenly questioned, remembering that she had not yet acknowledged the ac-she had not yet acknowledged the acquaintanceship.

Audrey hesitated.
Should she tell the boy the sad story of her life? He was wise and considerate beyond his years, and his tenderest sympathies would be hers.
But somewhow she shrank from giving voice to it. Sometime she meant to tell him all about it; tonight, however, she lid not feel quite equal to it; her strength bim all about it; tonight, however, she did not feel quite equal to it; her strength had already been severely taxed by learning that her old-time lover had been so near her. So she merely answered: "When I was a young girl, and my parents were living, I spent a few weeks I New York, and went a good deal into Pociety, and I am quite sure that this "Ir. Arthur Halstead is the same gentleman whom I met at that time. I afterward heard of his marriage to a Miss Ida Montrose, but I have never seen him since. I am very glad, however, that you lent them such manly assistance today; and I am glad, tog, that they know you are my boy," she concluded, fondly. "Now," she added, after a moment of silence. "I am going to send you away: "Now, she added, after a moment of stience. "I am going to send you away; for I wish to get all the rest I can, so as to be fresh again tomorrow morning. Good-night, Rich; you are such a com-fort to me."

fort to me."

She drew him down to her, and kissed him on his lips and forehead, and then, with a smile and a fond pat on his cheek, she sent him downstairs to Mrs. Allen, who, she said, must be lonely.

But as soon as the door closed after him she buried her face in her pillow, with a heartbroken sob.

"So near and yet so far," she murmured. "I cannot bear it even now, after all these long years; and if it were not for that dear boy, the future would seem almost unendurable to me."

She still had the card which Rich had given her, and laving it beneath her cheek, she fell to sobbing as if her heart were breaking. "I am weak, weak." she cried. "to love a man who is the husband of another; but I cannot help it—I gave myself to him for all time in those sweet old days. Oh, Arthur! Arthur! we made a lifelong mistake—or, rather, I made a great mistake; I never should have yielded to papa; I ought to have considered our mutual happiness, and not tried to right one wrong by committing another. Yet it is folly and weakness to grieve so wildly at this late day."

But Audrey Waldemar was not a weak woman, notwithstanding she had broken down so completly upon learning that Arthur Halstead had been so near her that day.

She fought her grief out by herself—that day.

She fought her grief out by herself—fought with her regrets, her longings and her undying love, until she gained the victory and came forth from her chamber the next morning her own lovely self once more. She was a trifle paler than usual, but as sweet and calm as if no tempest of grief had swept over her, bowing her proud spirit to the very earth. But the peaceful quiet and the enjoyment of that mountain retreat was over for her; a strange restlessness took possession of her, and only a few days later she informed Mrs. Allen that she had decided, after all, to act upon her suggestion and take a trip up through the Canadas, and then return to New York. Accordingly, a week from the very day on which Rich left Arthur Halstead and his invalid wife, they left the green hills of Vermont and turned, their steps still farther north.

They proceeded to Quebec, where they spent two or three days, and then took a steamer up the St. Lawrence to Montreal.

On the steamer they found a large She fought her grief out by herself-

On the steamer they found a large company of tourists, and among them Audrey was delighted to meet a couple of friends, who were traveling with a party of young people about Rich's age, or a little older.

There were four young ladies from fourteen to eighteen, and two lads of fifteen or sixteen, and they were as gay and happy as it is possible for young people to be. people to be.
"It will be so nice for Rich." Audrey "It will be so nice for Rich." Audrey said to Mrs. Allen, "for he has never had much society, and I shall accept Mrs. Campbell's invitation to join their party; their plans are very nearly the same as ours, and it will be pleasanter for us all."

party; their plans are very nearly the same as ours, and it will be pleasanter for us all."

There were also on board the steamer two characters who afforded considerable amusement to the more aesthetic pleasure-seekers about them.

They were Mr. George Washington Starkey and Miss Martha Ann Starkey, of Starkeyville, Maine.

The former was about fifty years of age. He was tall and large of frame, with an awkward manner and gait. His face as very plain, but expressive of boundless good nature, and he had a scant supply of hair and no beard. His dress consisted of a pair of light trousers, a long-taled black coat and vest, a stand-up collar, and a tall hat.

THE ALDBOROUGH MURDER

King Held Responsible by the Coroner's Jury.

The Prisoner Was Not One of the Barnardo Boys.

Rodney, Ont., Sept. 17 .- The inquest nto the death of James William Freeman was concluded yesterday, when the jury, after a few minutes' deliberation, brought in the following verdict:

"That the said James William Freestart at that, and asked, in a queer tone start at that, and asked, in a queer tone at the drive barn of D. B. Freeman, in were well."
"That was strange," Audrey replied, county of Elgin, from a gunshot card, Rich, so that I may know his card, Rich, so that "It is in one of my pockets." he returned, beginning to hunt for it. Freeman that he whipped King, the accused, with a gad one day last June, in the field on his farm, because of persistent neglect of duty. The preliminary examination will likely be held in St. Thomas.

NOT A BARNARDO BOY. Toronto, Ont., Sept. 16 .- A. B. Owen, manager of the Canadian branch of r. Barnardo's Home, says that Chas. King, who is charged with the murder of James Freeman, near Rodney, has no connection whatever with the Barnardo Homes, and adds:

"The statement that King belonged to the home is calculated to do a great injury to the immigration work in which the homes are engaged, and to reflect discredit upon the many thousands of Barnardo boys and men who are now settled throughout the Dominion. We have recently had a reunion of the old boys in Toronto. amongst those present being several who are at the present time holding most responsible positions, and the statement that the young man King was brought out by the Barnardo Homes is likely to bring discredit up-on them."

ENGLISHMEN WON.

London, Sept. 16.-Eddie Connolly. an American fighter, was defeated here last night by Tom Woodley, English, after eleven rounds of hard fighting, for a purse of $2,000 and the 144-pound championship. Up to the sixth round Connolly forced the fighting. In that round, however, the Engishman came back and nearly succeeded in knocking his man out. From that on Woodley took the lead and won easily. The bout was one of the flercest ever seen in the Wonderland Club.

YACHTING.

Sir Thomas Lipton for another series of races for the America's cup will be forwarded within a few days, so as to reach the New York Yacht Club be-

Confirmation was forthcoming today of the report that the hull of the Shamrock III will be of milled steel instead of manganese bronze, as in the in Boston our rivals have won.' case of the previous challengers. The new yacht's design does not differ materially from those of the previous Shamrocks, although there is some divergency from the old lines forward. The new boat will not be so costly as the Shamrock II.

White, a lumber contractor, of Waldwick, N. J., for heavy damages. With hills on one side, and a noisy, swift running trout brook on the other, the bit of forest was dear to the heart of Rip Van Winkle. There was a rambling building, half hidden among the trees, and in this retreat. nearly half a mile from the Jefferson homestead, the actor and his chosen friends would hunt, fish and enjoy other primitive diversion for weeks at a time. Some years ago, when the aged actor, from sheer loneliness, was impelled to give up this secluded home and take up his abode with his sons at Buzzards Bay, Mr. and Mrs. John Bally Miller purchased the homestead, Jefferson retaining the forest. many months ago Jefferson leased the property to John G. Roberts, of Ridgewood. Recently the actor was in-formed by Mrs. Miller that woodsmen were felling the trees for Contractor White, who intended to shape them into telegraph poles. Before Jefferson's attorneys, Black & Kneeland, of New York, could take proper action, hundreds of handsome trees had been

His Bizerta Speech Classed With "After-Dinner Indiscretions."

Berlin, Sept. 17. - The German foreign office treats M. Pelletan's Bizirta speech lightly and is disposed to attach no more importance to it than to the after-dinner indiscretions of the French minister of war. Gen. Andre, a few weeks ago, of which the German Government took no official notice. At the foreign office it was said that as Germany had no political interests in the basin of the Mediterranean and as she never will have, what France is doing there does not specially affect her.

M. Pelietan's reference to the "barbarism of old Germany" is treated by the newspapers here with ridicule rather than indignation. London, Sept. 16. — What is designated as M. Pelletan's "new diplomacy" is not taken seriously in London. It is pointed out here that in the course of his tour the minister similarly referred to Germany and Italy, and semi-official French papers like the Journal des Debats, declare his sentiments are those neither of France nor of her Government. The London newspapers commenting on M. Pelletan's speech at Bizerta, quote his ingenious confession that he had not 'yet become accustomed to being minister" as sufficient to discount his utterances. Even in France M. Pelletan has always been regarded as an
