To Reform Engineer's Office.

"I shall run for alderman next year, and I shall make my platform the reformation of the city engineer's office."
This is what Mr. F. A. Jones, of West London, told The Advertiser today. He s determined to see that the city proceeds with the construction of breakwater, and he declares that Mr. W. T. Hamilton did not wish to be understeed at the council meeting, as wishing the city to postpone work on the breakwater until next year.

"We all want the city to do all can this year," Mr. Jones said. The West Londoner also stated that the people of the village are not so curing the deeds of land. In the cases of W. H. Bartram and Mrs. Hazelgrove, the city first made a deal for a certain strip of ground. Later it was found that this strip would not do, and they wanted to take 15 feet more for the same price as had been at first agreed upon. 'Show me the man in the city who would put up with such nonsense as that," Mr. Jones exclaimed.

The fact that we sell more raincoats than any other store in town, is probably the best proof that we sell the best. The fact that we have easily the best-fitting coats in London, has counted largely in our success. We never have to urge a man to buy when he sees a coat on, its good points are too noticeable. The broad hand-padded shoulders, the perfect close lying collar, the free skirt drapery, the clever hang of the sleeves, he sees all these at a glance and they convince. This season's showing includes some specially handsome Scotch tweed effects in both light and dark shades, also some of the celebrated Hart, Schaffner & Marx coats from Chicago, in plain and fancy patterns and shades. hampton, N. Y., has a library of 15,000 Springfield, Ohio, has 40,000 populaion and nearly 6,000 volumes of fiction, In general, it must be said that London has a smaller public library for its size than most other cities. More than that, other cities have much more fiction in their libraries.

What is the reason? It is because, in the first instance, the London library board does not buy the books. There are several easons for this fact. knows, is granted one-half mill on the dollar of the general taxation. year the grant amounted to $8,700. The city council was "short," however, and asked the board not to spend all the money. The board consented and only $8,000, thus practically making a grant to the city of $700. The regular running expenses of the library cannot be cut down in any way. The flexible expense is that in connection with the purchase of books, and thus it was the books that suffered this year.

It will be noted that in the above cited report the superintendent says that the London library board should spend "at least $1,000" a year on books, not taking into account the cost of replacing or repairing old ones. Well, the year 1905 is drawing to a close and the board has only spent $600 on books so far, although $1,800 was set aside for that purpose last January. About 600 volumes of fiction have become worn so badly that they have had to be taken out of circulation. They have been worn by being read. Some of them have been out 175 times

Just think of that.

At last evening's meeting of the board Mr. Manigault moved that a certain list of worn-out books to be replaced, which had been drawn up by the librarian, be adopted. The motion vas lost. It means that works fiction are growing scarcer in the li-brary all the time.

The reason given by the opponents of Mr. Manigault's motion was that Percentage Lower Than in for more new books. At least $1,000 now be purchased down-town by the should be expended annually for the public very cheaply, since their copynext five years to purchase standard works.' I quite agree with the secrebuy a book down-town for 13 cents, why place that book in the library? On the other hand, Mr. Manigault, who was seen by The Advertiser. claims that the man who was paid his library tax has a right to find all classes of decent books in the library Suppose a man owns $1,000 in property and therefore pays about 50 cents a year towards the library. He has the right to read all the books he likes, while if he spent the 50 cents downtown on paper-covered fiction he would only get about four books a year. Be-sides, when the man has paid his 50 First of all it must be remarked that the superintendent of public libraries does not think that the London library has enough books, considering the size of the city. This piece of criticism he thanded to the local library board to the specialist, the lover of history, of philosophy, of science, gets what he wants. That the great mass of public patrons want fiction is shown by the circulation counter, 67 per cent are fiction. In the United States the percentage ranges between 70 and 80 per cent for different cities.

Some members of the board say that so much fiction should not be read.But. coming to the fine point, many ask if the board has any "say" in this mat-ter. Has it the right to dictate to the people what they will read when the people pay for the books? There is no doubt that the average citizen believes that the library board's business is to buy the books that the people want, always providing that the books are Among the 600 books that have been worn out are such authors as Bradden. Cary, Broughton, Roe, etc. The very fact that many of these books have been out such a number of times shows that the people want them. Is the board going to deliberately neglect to replace them? And many of the 4,000 books of fiction at present on the shelves are in very poor condition. The general conception of a public library is, a place where the people get their books cheaply. It is not a place where books of instruction, or books which people should read, are stored ip for reference. Whatever else may be said, the following facts cannot be disputed: 1.

That people are complaining that there s not enough fiction in the library. 2. That the London library board spends less than most other boards. 3. That London has fewer books for its size than most other cities. 4. That London has very much less fiction than other cities. as it is ready for use.
