GAS SERVICE CHARGE AN IMPROPER ONE, DECLARES JUDGE JUDD

Will Give Written Judgment in Case of Wenige vs. City Gas Company-Hearing Held in Ninth Division Court Today-Case Hinges On the Question of Voluntary

Judge J. C. Judd reserved judgment in the case of Ald. G. A. Wenige vs. the City Gas Company in the minth division court this morning. Ald. Wenige was suing for the recovery of money paid for service charges. Judge Judd said that he was of the opinion that the charge was illegal, but it was a question whether the plaintiff paid the charges voluntary upon which the case hinged.

he would decide that it was an improper charge. His judgment will be a written one, and at some length, and will be handed down in two weeks, the court stated. His reason for giving a written decision was that so many people and so much money was depending on the case. Ald. Wenige stated that on July 5, 1920, he went to the gas office and asked a young lady at the desk if it was necessary to pay the service charge. Howard Cluff, acting for the company, claimed that their notice to the consumers regarding the service charge which he did not pay.
