

Episcopal Church in this City, during the absence of Rev. Hobart Chetwood, who was compelled to seek relief from his labors by reason of ill health. Here on Sunday last, while discharging his duty as a minister of God, at the very altar of God's Church, and before a congregation of the worshippers of God, Dr. Lundy was stricken down by the cold hand of death.

The limited time at our command as well as our limited acquaintance with the deceased will preclude us from making here an adequate estimate of the character and abilities of Dr. Lundy; this will no doubt be done by a hand better qualified than ours for the task. We may however be permitted to say that the Doctor, though hampered and afflicted with a hereditary disease which finally caused his death, was an indefatigable worker in behalf of whatever he considered the right. He was, we are assured, a preacher of unquestioned ability and eloquence. He was a man of fine literary tastes, and an enthusiast in sacred music, being himself a vocalist of no ordinary powers.
