

"Don't you worry your head about him, Master Reggie. You shouldn't ever have took up with none of that lot, you shouldn't. I never thought who it was you'd got hold of. You may be sure he's far enough off by this time, maybe in jail for stealing; and he'll never think of you more."

This assurance was by no means so cheering to Reggie as Sam meant it to be. And he did not believe it either. He was certain Nat would miss him, and he was certain he was not a thief.

Meanwhile the Indian letters kept coming regularly, and Miss Everson always added this comment to Reggie's, "You must remember that when this was written, they did not know how naughty and deceitful you had been."

Reggie listened in silence, looking the personification of "don't care," and what was worse, feeling it more and more.

At length, one day a telegram arrived. Reggie saw the boy bring it, and wondered what it was about, as he had never seen one come before. It was not long before Miss Everson sent for him.

"Reginald, your parents have received the letter in which I told them of your sad behaviour, and they are so much shocked, that your mother is coming home at once. It appears that they were coming together later on, but she started immediately. You know that she is not at all strong, and I hope you feel what a sad thing it is, that she should have to undertake this voyage alone, on your account."

Specially Written by Mrs. E. H. Mitchell, and Music composed by Fred. E. J. Lloyd, of Shigiwake, P. Q.

Orders are now being received by the Rev. Fred. E. J. Lloyd.

The Lord Bishop of Quebec writes:
"The hymn is very good, of the music I am not so well able to judge; I recommend both."

The Lord Bishop of Toronto writes:

"I shall be pleased to authorise the hymn and music for use in my Diocese on the occasion referred to. The music I think to be spirited and likely to take the ear of our people."

The Lord Bishop of Montreal writes:

"I authorise its use in my Diocese."

The Lord Bishop of Algoma writes:

"I shall be glad to know of its being used in my Diocese on the occasion of the Festival referred to."

JOSEPH THE PRIME MINISTER.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS:

"Among expository preachers in the American Pulpit Dr. W. M. Taylor stands easily in the front rank. The story of Joseph is presented in fifteen discourses, all of them marked by the characteristic excellencies of the author's style and method."—Sunday School Times.

"We place this collection among the best sermons of their class. The exposition of the text is worked out in a particularly fine way which makes the most of each point as it comes up without confusing the larger relations of the history."—The Independent, N.Y.

"Dr. Taylor's volume will be read with intense interest; it is a book which may be read with profit by every one though it may be specially recommended to young men."—Christian Commonwealth.

"This volume by Dr. Taylor lacks none of the good qualities of its predecessors."—Literary World.
