Waterfalls
Natural parks illustrate natural laws. Photosynthesis turns spring leaves green, the wind carves rocks and water seeks its own level.
The results are often awesome. Melting mountain snows fall to the sea, run over boulders and precipices and leap, spray and splash in the sun.
At Nahanni National Park the Nahanni River drops four hundred feet over Virginia Falls, twists through the Figure-8 Rapids and then rushes through canyons 4,000 feet deep.
Laughing Falls and Angel's Staircase cascade in Yoho; Upper and Lower Bertha fall in Waterton Lakes. None is more enchanting than the shining hooped skirts of the falls that billow down behind Cap-des-Rosiers in Forillon National Park in Quebec.
