However, it does not appear to my delegation that certain steps advocated in this Resolution can contribute to achieve the fundamental goal which the vast majority of the members of the Committee strive to reach. Although the situation in southern Africa may one day endanger international peace and stability, it appears at least doubtful to my delegation that the Charter provision concerning such international peace and security are applicable in the present circumstances. This is why, while being in complete accord with the worth-while objective of this Resolution, we regret that we must abstain in voting in favour of the whole Resolution.
