

preserve what evidence exists on this point, with a view to the introduction of his cause before the proper tribunal at Rome.

Thus lived Father Louis della Vigna, and thus he died, literally "a stranger in a strange land." Yet not a stranger, because, bearing in mind the words quoted above, as a member of the great Catholic family, he was at home amongst his children of the same faith to whom he had ministered. If he was taken away at the very time when the people of St. Mary's were becoming alive to the possession of "the jewel, set in its rich casing of ascetic brilliants," which Providence had placed in their midst, yet, to quote once more the words of the Bishop of London, "his memory has remained amongst them like a sweet fragrance, 'like the good odor of Christ unto God.'"

