Secretary of State Scott observed that he had failed to notice that idea had elicited any enthusiasm on the part of elicited any enthusiasm on the part of the press. The comparison of the duties of British and Canadian ministers could hardly be compared. Senator Ross had pointed to the multifarious duties of Canadian ministers, and the many aids in the way of under secretaries provided for the British ministers. He had, however, neglected to call attention to the fact that there were nine provinctal and legislative governments in Canada, which took care of a large proportion of the affairs which, in the motherland, had to be looked after by the ministers and the parliament. Then while Canada had that there were nine provincial and legislative governments in Canada, which

Election by the People. Hon. Mr. Scott said that more than once with ministers absent from Ottawa he had alone looked after business of the government, and his opinion was that the affairs of the departments were so organized that they could run smoothly in most cases without ministerial scrutiny of de-tails. He declared his belief that if the senate would have an important status it must be elected by the peo-ple. There was a very desirable simplicity in the Canadian system of government, the ministers were closely in touch with the people, as was shown by the fact that if governments give reasonably good administration the people will continue to keep them in power. This was shown by the eighteen years of Conservative tenure, and the 32 years of existence of the Ontario Government, of which Senator Ross had been a member. Hon.
Mr. Scott said he would be sorry to see any part of the American system copied by Canada. No one who observed the arbitrary power exercised ford soon,
