SUPERVISED PLAYGROUNDS

(By Miss Mabel Peters). The object of the playground is to keep children off the streets; out of mischief; away from evil influence; to develop a healthy body, a kind heart, and a regard for the law.

hildren, while providing for them a centre of enjoyment.

Nature implants in the child an instinct for play, for motion, for association with other children, and this instinct holds the source of all that is good. The advocates of the modern playground maintain and have demonstrat that the most valuable service it renders is to the character, and it is in the super vised playground that modern education is taking a stand. Organized games, under the direction of good trainers, teach respect for the rights of others, firmnes and self-control, cement the school and the home and counteract the lawlessness and destructiveness which are the lessons of the vacant lot. The word playground is inclusive. Its ideals are so plastic that in each cit may be athletic, rocreative, literary or manual development.

Herein lies the solution of many of the evils that affect society. The modern playground in the school or its yards, while directing the passion for play inherent in all children forms correct habits and cheerful views of life.

It is the coming reform. It is natural, basic, formative, and includes possibilities that as yet are only suggested.

It may not be generally known that the public works department, has cestablished as the corner of Main street and Paradise Row. The fact has not hitherto been published, as the department is a little careless—or perhaps modest is a better term—about advertising its beneficient undertakings.

These baths are for evening setvice only. The watering cart goes along and carefully fills all the cavities, large and small, in the pavement. Mr. Kelley said that the case arose over Mr. Smith being technical.

Mr. Kelley argued that this was a very important case. It is of a criminal nature and Capt. Smith had asked his honor to put these two young men in prison. His honor said that he did not think that the young men could be convicted under the law, and said that he was inclined to believe that one of them at least could not, and he was doubtful whether or not the other could. His honor allowed the case to stand pending a settlement.
