NO GERMAN DEBACLE, SAYS GERARD, BACK

Ex-Ambassador Thinks the Country's Ultimate Government will be Like America's.

James W. Gerard, ex-ambassador to Germany, who arrived in New York on Saturday aboard the Cunarder Berengaria, said apropos of cables reports to the effect that Germany was on the verge of a total collapse; that while he did not believe the country's collapse would be complete he agreed that Germany was in a bad way.

"Germany is divided into two camps," said Mr. Gerard. "These are the Liberal and the Junker. There are extremists on both sides, of course, but the government that will ultimately prevail in Germany will be a tempered one."

The Germany of today is unsuited to a parliamentary form of government. There will be no debacle in Germany, as there has been in Russia. The Germans are too astute and efficient not to have taken the bitter lesson laid before them in Russia.

"Germany, however, is existing industrially on a ridiculous basis. Everything is sacrificed to industry. The only one who is making money in Germany is the manufacturer who is selling his products abroad for gold. The property owner—that is the owner of a building—is stuck because he cannot get any more rent. Wages are small and it is a well-known fact that in Germany a full stomach is the principal desire of the worker."

"For this reason the working class, the middle class, which includes the small shopkeepers, and the professional classes are in an extremely bad way in Germany. The only people besides the manufacturers who are not in a desperate condition are the Junkers, who have kept their money always in land, and land always adjusts itself."

Rathenau's Death a Great Loss. "The assassination of Walter Rathenau, who was a personal friend of mine, is without doubt a great loss to Germany. His murder was unquestionably instigated by the officers of the old monarchist party. Rathenau represented all that was good in the new Germany. A few weeks before his death I sent him a clipping from an English newspaper, giving a dispatch from Berlin in which it was stated that the German Government should prevent my visiting Germany."

"The reply from Rathenau was that the German Government found it impossible to control what silly newspapers chose to publish, but that I would be heartily welcomed if I chose to make Germany a visit during my stay abroad. My time was so taken up between France and England, however, that I was unable to make the proposed visit."

The political situation in Europe, Mr. Gerard said, is discouraging. "All the various nationalities are biting, snarling, and snapping at each other, just as they were before the war," he added. "In England I discovered a decided feeling against France, so much so that the British are telling Americans that France is our hereditary enemy. I disagree with France's critics that France is imperialistic. France is merely scared to death by the invasion she has suffered. Reports of the huge army now being trained in Russia by Trotsky are not tending to reassure her."

There is much discussion in France as to disarmament, but if I were a Frenchman, I would certainly not consent to reduce the French army."

A meeting of the Halifax Golf and Country Club was held last evening, the president, Dr. P. A. McDonald, in the chair. The business of the meeting was in connection with the laying out of the new course at Dutch Village.

The report of the legal committee with regard to the purchase of the properties was read. Option on one of the properties has been closed with and the remaining ones do not expire until August, but the owners are assured that the club will take them up. The property to be acquired will cost $83,100.

The plans, drawn by Stanley Thompson, were exhibited. It is probable that the course will be laid down by the Thompson firm of Toronto, who have submitted a price of $45,000, which includes the water system.

The estimated total cost of the work will amount to between $75,000 to $80,000, $80,000 of which is already subscribed.

STRANGE CASE OF DEAD MAN THOUGHT TO BE A CANADIAN

Pittsburg, July 12.—A man's body, found yesterday on a hillside near the Westview Coal Company mine, near Carnegie, is believed to be that of James Whitman, Jr., of Windsor (Ont.). A gunshot wound was found in the right temple. A note saying that the man had been drugged and robbed, was found in a pocket and a pistol, with one discharged cartridge, was lying nearby. Another note found among the dead man's effects was to the effect that his mother lived at Moline (Mich.). Still another note requested the finders of the body to communicate with a J. H. Mendel, of Detroit. Morgue officials last night were unable to locate Mr. Mendel.

VETERAN EDITOR FROM BERMUDA

S. Seward Toddings Tells of Attractions of His Island Home and of Development of Tourist Trade.

There was an interesting visitor to the city this week in the person of S. Seward Toddings, of Hamilton, Bermuda. Mr. Toddings, who has been at the Royal hotel for a few days, is editor of The Mid Ocean, and has such an attractive way of telling of the beauties of his native island that those who have met him must all be waiting for the day when they may have a chance to take a trip to the British West Indies.

Mr. Toddings came to this country in 1860 to attend school and in 1866 received his degree from Mount Allison College. Dr. David Allison was one of his teachers and Mr. Toddings said that Dr. Allison recognized him in Halifax three years ago, although it was more than fifty years since he had been a member of his classes.

In regard to Bermuda, he said that it had been more or less of a tourist resort since 1870. At that time and for several years the tourist trade was confined largely to people who were seeking a healthful climate. However, some of these people who came for their health brought their children along with them, and they found that the place was lively and congenial to their happiness.

When these young folks returned to their homes, they boasted of their good times and this took people there who were seeking holiday enjoyment.

The government was not slow to realize the possibilities of the tourist trade and set about to advertise the island as a tourist resort, so that in 1908 about 7,000 tourists visited Bermuda, and in 1918 the traffic amounted to almost 28,000. When the Great War came tourist trade fell down below a thousand yearly.

After the armistice a regular service was provided by a shipping company, which bought up a section of the island known as Tucker Town, and the government gave them certain powers of expropriation, so that the strongest inducements could be offered to bring increased numbers of tourists. The improvements which are being made on the various resorts will cost in the millions. There is hotel accommodation for about 700 people at any one time and there are now four golf courses on the island. Hamilton is the largest centre and within a few miles are Longhouse, Rosebank and St. Georges, which are small hamlets and offer many attractions for the tourist.

Mr. Toddings, who left yesterday to spend a few weeks in Shelburne and Yarmouth counties in Nova Scotia, where the fishing is good, has been a newspaper editor for fifty-three years, having been editor of The Colonist from 1869 to 1911 and of The Mid Ocean since 1911. He has never done anything else since he gave up military life in 1869, after being connected with the militia for three years, as he believes that one job is about all that a man can do properly at once.

DYING AFTER RACE FOR EMPTY WALLET

Policeman, in Contest on Road, Is Hit by Auto Whose Owner Flees and Is Arrested.

New York, July 13.—On the Nyacay turnpike at Manuet, William Dickinson, a Tuxedo policeman, from the car which his wife was driving, and Joseph Walton of Oakland, N. J., from his own car, spied a pocketbook in the road. Dickinson and one of Walton's companions, who were John Lauthner and Milton Pulls of Pompton Plains, N. J., jumped for it as the drivers stopped their cars. Walton, backing his car, bumped into the two contestants, injuring Dickinson so severely he is dying in Nyack Hospital.

Pulls and Lauthner took Dickinson to the hospital in his own car, while Walton drove to the Nyack ferry and crossed to Pleasantville, having arranged for his two companions in a tour to the Pacific Coast to join him there. When the Nyack police discovered that Walton had fled the accident, they had him arrested in Pleasantville. He was charged there with having a pistol in violation of the Sullivan law and was brought back to Nyack and held in jail without bail pending arrangement on charges of assault and failure to report the accident.

In the pocketbook was the name of William A. Farnow, Belford, N. Y., and nothing else.

MAN DETAINED BY RENFREW POLICE NOT HENRY G. MARR

A description of a man, who was being held by the Renfrew (Ont.) police, does not tally with Henry G. Marr's characteristics, according to the family last evening. The Renfrew authorities' description arrived yesterday afternoon by mail and was just a few hours later than a telegram sent by the same officials in regard to the unknown man being detained by them. They asked that a description of the missing merchant, now gone since Thursday, June 23, be forwarded and this was telegraphed.
