AT SAULT STE. MARIE. THE PRINCE READS AN ADDRESS

BY COURTESY OF C.R.R.

WHY NOT SIT AT THE SAME TABLE?

A somewhat lower level of prices has been established on both electric and iron rivets, which show an advance in new discounts issued of about 1-2 per cent. This is true of both single and double diamond glass with the exception of the first three brackets of single on which the list shows an advance which offsets change in discount very largely. Linseed oil becomes scarcer every week. Crushers are pretty well loaded up with business and cannot handle the orders offering. This does not mean that volume of orders is exceptionally heavy, but rather that shortage of seed is becoming acute. No relief is looked for before another month or six weeks passes and new crop seed is available. Prices show a slight advance this week. Turpentine has reacted from the high level reached last week and is now being quoted at figures showing a decline of ten cents a gallon. This is in line with downward move shown in markets to the south. Resumption of overseas buying of turpentine may mean higher prices again as stocks are just about at level of domestic requirements.

IN WALL STREET

New York, Sept. 15.—Prices forged steadily ahead during the first hour, easing slightly at noon. The market was further stimulated by the greater strength of United States Steel, which increased its gain to two points. Other noteworthy accessions to the early rise included Bethlehem, Lackawanna, Republic and Nova Scotia Steel, Baldwin and American Locomotive, Mexican and Pan-American Petroleum, Texas Company, Motors and their specialties, high priced tobacco, Atlantic Gulf, American International and Leathers.

Tuesday's inquiry for rails was resumed, Pacific, Grangers and Coals leading the investment group. New low records for French and Italian exchange exerted little influence.

FAVORS ARMY OF 25,000 MEN

General Wood Thinks U. S. War Dept. Bill Calls For Too Large A Force, In Consideration Of Economic Conditions

Washington, Sept. 15.—An army of 250,000 men is sufficient for all the peace time requirements of the United States and a sufficient nucleus for any establishment based on universal military training of a citizen army, Major-General Leonard Wood told the senate committee on military affairs. General Wood took issue with the policy recommended by the war department as embodied in the bill now pending before the committee.

The war department bill calls for a professional army of 576,000, an army, General Wood said, which is more than twice enough to meet all demands and far too large considering the economic condition of the country.

General Wood also arraigned the policy of the department providing for a three months' course in two successive years for all boys reaching the age of nineteen, declaring that a continuous period of six months in one year was much better from the point of view of making efficient soldiers and also less expensive.

The aircraft programme of the United States, General Wood said, had been practically scrapped since the signing of the armistice, despite the lesson learned in the war. It was brought out that in the month of July last the United States produced only sixteen planes, whereas the British government had delivered to the United States 2,000. The witness urged that all aircraft for the army and the navy should be put in charge of a department with full powers over production, training of officers and maintenance of flying fields.

Plan of Organization.

General Wood recommended the organization of the standing army on a five or a three-division basis to meet the continental needs of the United States. If the three-division basis is chosen, one division, he said, should be established on the Atlantic coast, one on the Pacific coast, and one in the middle west. He recommended that the remainder of the forces should be distributed as training cadres for the yearly recruits under the proposed universal training scheme.

He again took issue with Newton D. Baker, secretary of war, and Peyton C. March, chief of staff, on the officer question. There should always, he said, be 10 to 15 per cent of officers in excess of the actual needs of the army but the general officer organization of thirty-two major-generals and eighty-eight brigadiers asked in the war department bill is "an impediment to promotion of younger men."

Military Training.

Discussing the general question of universal military training, General Wood declared that the war had proved that there is no danger of militarism in the United States; that all the soldiers are only too anxious to get back to civil life, though always willing to do their duty.

"I would create, out of the men who had served with the colors, six months at the age of nineteen while they were getting their training, the national reserve force. They would enter in the calendar year which marked the attainment of the age of nineteen and serve from April 1 to Oct. 1.

"Do you not think that three months, as suggested by the war department,

RIOT STICKS TAKE PLACE OF BAYONETS

Preparations of the federal authorities to send regular army and navy troops into the city stood as an emergency precaution, but it was said that unless there were a general strike there was no likelihood of their being called upon. The state troops, however, are likely to be on duty for some time as Commissioners Curtis said he could not hope to build up a new police force in a day, and any letting down in protective measures would invite a recurrence of lawlessness.

Pulpit Reference.

Allusion to the strike were made from many pulpits on Sunday. Bishop Anderson at St. Peter's (Catholic) church told his congregation that it was the duty of every one to uphold law and order. He urged parents to keep their boys off the streets at night.
