SONBODDY'S SISTER

(Byron H. Stauffer.)

In our old school reader was a poem entitled "Somebody's Mother." It told of an old woman led across the busy, slippery street by a bright laddie who returned to the merry group of his fellows to say:

"She's somebody's mother, boys, you know. For all she is aged and poor and slow."

I wish a rhyme could be given us on "Somebody's Sister," to stir the noblest imaginations of our youth, and elevate their demeanor toward every young woman they meet.

Somebody's sister waits on in the restaurant, my boy. She comes from a home with parents and brothers and sisters clustered in its memories. Here may be a humbler circle than your sister knows, but to her brother she is just as precious as the maiden who will greet you at dinner tonight is to you. So be so patient to the waiter girl.

Somebody's sister is the chambermaid at the hotel that sheltered you last night. She has the meanest task in the house, and usually does it well. Too often she is forgotten, except when rude jokes or jestive jokes are passed. Women travelers can acquire no more Christian habit than that of encouraging the girl who makes the beds.

Somebody's sister clicks the typewriter in your office, young man. The angel of your home does not need to call forth the heroism that the stenographer exercises every morning as she prepares for her day's bread-winning feat. I knew a young woman whose father's sudden death compelled her to leave her piano and painting lessons in order to qualify as a stenographer. Her swift fingers soon supported her frail mother and two little sisters.

By and by, the young fellow in the next office contrived her acquaintance. One day when he thought matters were ripe, he introduced her out to see a lot of his rich father had given him. After some effort, he succeeded in explaining that if she'd have him, he would put up a nice bungalow in the Autumn. She took the proposition to her three charges, and then, after a half day's crying, declined it and cheerily went back to her work. You can afford to slip your hat to the stenographer, my son, but ready for any second-hand shoe.

Somebody's sister is behind the counter where you buy your box of candy. There are but one or two lives, or perhaps merely one or two reverses, between your sister and such a position. A funeral or a failure might put her behind the counter. The candy counter girl is likely just as sensitive and of as fine a fibre as your sister is. Bestow the same courtesy upon her which you would want to be shown the girl you meet so jauntily. Such bordering jests as you might thoughtlessly give your sister wear the enamel of her purity.

Somebody's sister is walking by the street corner where you are walking by. She is congregating tonight. You are feeling merry, with a bit of loose change in your pocket and the day's work over. A group of young fellows will recklessly make remarks about a young man, alone, wandering in the evening against your biography. The next young woman to happen along may be your sister or your sweetheart. If you chime, not knowing, should offer her an insult, there would be trouble wouldn't there?

Report of Secretary and Agent

Ladies and Gentlemen.—I have the honor to submit the thirty-second annual report of this society and will not need to say too much of your time in doing so. The tabulated statement will show a few more cases investigated or dealt with in some manner than that of last year, but I am pleased to state that there has been a marked improvement in the character of the influence of the society, and that people are more ready to accept of the rights of the dumb animal, but as there are always exceptions it will require perseverance in our work.

GETTING GRAY? USE SAGE TEA TO RESTORE NATURAL COLOR OF HAIR

Says Sage and Sulphur Darkens Hair Beautifully and Ends Dandruff. Hair that loses its color and lustre, or when it fades, turns gray, dull and lifeless is caused by a lack of sulphur in the hair, says a well-known local pharmacist. Our grandmother made up a mixture of Sage Tea and Sulphur to keep her locks dark and beautiful, and even today this simple preparation has no equal. Millions of women and men, too, who value that even color that beautiful dark shade of hair which is so attractive use only Sage Tea and Sulphur. Nowadays we are not bothered with the task of gathering the sage leaves and the busy mixing at home. Simply ask at
