Were you eyer at his house?" she asked.

"You might feel differently if you had been."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that instead of being generous he is one of the most selfish men living," she said.

And then, in answer to my request for explanation, she told me how, despite the fact that he had a fairly good salary, his poor little wife was always scrimped and pinched for money, never went anywhere, had to constantly be trying to make one dollar do the work of two or three, and hadn't had a new gown for years. And all the while he goes about lavishly letting money for little things dribble through his fingers and grandly playing the munificient gentleman.

Such generosity is the rankest kind of selfishness.

It's like stealing a blind man's pennies in order to make a big contribution to some memorial fund or some other show; charity or philanthropy.

And yet how many people do similar things?

How often I've seen men and women giving more than liberal tips, when I knew that half their bills weren't paid or half their family obligations met.

I know a working girl who gives munificently of her large salary to every charity, philanthropy and subscription list, yet doesn't contribute a cent to the sadly impoverished family treasury.

I have often been displeased by a slightly different, yet basically identical, species of that generosity which lavishly gives away what belongs to other people. This is the hospitality of the man who is perpetually inviting guests to his home, despite the fact that his wife has no maidand finds the steady stream of company too fleavy a tax on her slender vitality.

The many who do not understand, admire this man for his ready hospitality and his cordial manner, and think his wife ungracious when she fails to second his invitations so eagerly.

The Crystal Palace in London and the Man Who Has Saved it to the People by Paying $800,000

Every visitor to the international exhibitions or world's fairs, which have succeeded one another in the United States, and in Europe with such rapidity during the last half century and which have contributed so much to the development of industry and of commerce will be interested to learn that the great Crystal Palace, which was built for the first of these expositions, in 1851, has been saved from the hands of the wrecker.

Transferred en bloc immediately after the close of the exhibition from Hyde Park in the centre of the British metropolis to the metropolitan suburh of Sydenham, it has for more than fifty years equivalently described by the control of the sights of London, which every visitor, no matter whether English or foreign, sovereign or peasant,

The many who do not understand, admire this man for his ready hospitality and his cordial manner, and think his wife ungracious when she fails to second his invitations so eagerly.

The few who understand realize that he is unwarrantably giving away her strength and time in order to win undeserved praise and liking for himself.

There is one thing I'd love to know about this matter.

Do you suppose it's possible that these selfishly liberal folks really believe they are being fine and generous?

I wonder.

P.M.

The time was short and as the day for the sale had been judicially fixed in a manner that did not admit of its being changed, the Crystal Palace would have gone into the hands of the building speculators had not Lord Plymouth stepped forward and paid out of his own pocket the missing $800,000 for the purpose of preserving the Crystal Palace and its grounds from destruction. It is understood that if any more subscriptions come in, they will go primarily to the fund for the maintenance of the palace and grounds, and if after that anything remains over, it will be devoted to recouping Lord Plymouth, at any rate in part, for his public spirited and patriotic contribution.
