Gertainly, the twentieth year may be generally considered the time of life when formale beauty begins budding into real loveliness, if the former years have been occupied in acquiring useful knowledge and the principles of Christian duty. But when the seeds of vanity, folly and descitares sown in the nursery, and nourished at home and at school by flirtations, useless visits and the immoral current literature of the age, the cossence of a girl a youth, never guarded by modesty, may be properly expected to vanish with her teens. Her mother's circumstances were very straitened, sufficing barely to enable them to maintain a position in what is called ore spectable society: nevertheless, this young woman continued, by some means or the other, to gratify her prachart for dress, and gadded about here, and there, and everywhere, the most gaudily attired young person in the neighborhood. Though far from having a pretty face or fair figure, for she was both stooped and boney, yet she believed herself handsone; and by a vulgar, flippant forwardness, especially when mixed in company, extended the existence of stoomach and live great thought she was good booking. For two years she had been an occasional patient of mine. The settled pallor, the greasy tallowness of her complexion, conjointly with other symptoms, evidenced the existence of stoomach and live complaints; and the last visit I paid her was in consequence of frequent sensations of oppression and pain in the chest, which plainly indicated some organic disease of the heart.

A plucky New York woman had a warn tussle with a burglar, who entered her chamber, placed a pistol to her head, and put him to flight by her screams. He left his pistol in her hands and she keeps it as a trophy.

Said Mr. Hallam, the historian, godfather of Hallam Tennyson, the Laureate's eldest son, on the occasion of the christening. "Why not give the child your own name, as well as mine? Why not call him Alfred Hallam Tennyson?" "For fear," said the deep-voiced bard—" fpr fear he should turn out a fool! Let his name be Hallam only?"

Several fatal accidents from coal oil lamps exploding have lately securred, in various parts of Canada and the States. There is no safety except in using the best quality of oil, filling the lamps every morning, keeping them well trimmed, never letting them burn low; and above all not attempting to extinguish the flame by blowing down the glass.

An Englishman recently made a bet that he could kill a rat with his teeth, his hands being tied behind his back. He was severely bitten about the face but accomplished his feat, and would have repeated it at a public house, the wager being for a gallon of beer, but the landlord interfered and prohibited the spectacle on the the ground that it might get him into trouble.
