June 27.—The most pleasant social event of the season was a boating party given by Mr. and Mrs. Spence, whose pretty home is situated on the bank of the river. The bank of the river at that point is overhung with trees, on which a number of lanterns were hung. Viewed from the bridge, the scene presented a very pleasant appearance. The guests were received at the house and afterwards conducted to a wharf constructed for the occasion, where a number of boats were in waiting to convey the merry party whither their fancy directed. The river was calm, the moon bright, and everything in that state which makes a row the most delightful pastime imaginable. After spending upwards of two hours on the river, the party returned to the house, where ice-cream and other refreshments were served and enjoyed with great relish. Vocal and instrumental music was rendered by some of the guests in a most praiseworthy manner. Between five and six guests were present. After midnight the party broke up and all went home well pleased with the entertainment, as Mr. Spence really excels in that line.
