A poet's diary

2650 Prolegomenae Pacis LXXXIV: Moscow and the Bomb I

Please do give order to return back to the author these "pieces of poetry, after reading, and appreciative as severe as benevolent.

1.4.46 The most terrible of the authoritative statements
Of professor on the bomb is certainly that:
No defense against is unthinkable because of its elements
Of speed and small volume with such a tremendous effect
That whole London would no more be existing After one bomb thrown! cavern - living
Would be the only preservation against Gangsteriam International, by a State or a committed!

Thinking the situation through as at present
It looks like, after that it has been clearly stated
That the Nord-Pole way is the Satanically anointed
As the best between Canada and the atomgrad current Becoming for big planes the journey there and back doing,
And the conclusion of frankly, firmly, stating:
"Will master the whole situation who first will throw it,"
I can't but turn back to my formula of years seventy;

Once more fixed in details in my Memo IV "secret":
An International Court, of Jurists, not of Politicians, composed,
Permanently three of them day and night present, Should have the right to throw all Forces united of the Civilized World's Commonwealth against the State
Whose military elements would try to bate
Another State's integrity, its frontier crossing!
Automatically! without any discussion! at once!
