Poetry.
Prize Poem on O'Connell.
(The following poem by Mrs. C. Channoy Greene, the artist who painted the handsome O'Connell banner for the Irish Society, was awarded a prize at the O'Connell Centennial in Ottawa.) An hundred years, an hundred years, Pulse like a shadow o'er the earth,
The century with its hopes and fears, Since Ireland's noble son had birth.
Let this be ours, on whose hier We place a worth and virtue bring,
And drop the sympathetic tear When this grand unexpected King Of us, what need had he To glory, glory, glory, His country's glory, his The century's glory, his To those old Sages of the main—Burn rulers sailing wide and far—What need for him the glided chain Of diadem, pomp, or princely star.
All modes were his that ruled the hour—Bright humor radiant as the sun, The stern reproof, the glance of power,
The flash of wit, the shaft of scorn, His quick, impetuous fancy ran To group all forth in noble sense, Swift as the light, bold as a ban.
His thunder burst of eloquence.
He loved his land, yet his great heart, Loyal to Justice, knew no bound; Even to his faith, he bore his part And shaped the earth and sea around.
The bonds of tyrants shrank and fly Before his lightning spear and target.
His whirling blow, his battle cry,
The rallying shout of his charge!
He had his faults, what soul was brought Unblemished to this world of sin, But teach the well that evil wrought There burned the sacred fire within.
The smouldering flame of Celtic wrath Anon was brightened with a smile, The sun shone forth that crossed his path Like 'embrace' of his native life.
And then dear home beyond the wave, Thou mortal mother, and yet fair, He loved thy many ways to save,
And spread his glorious standard there.
Oh, how his heart that long has slept, Awoke again in glad refrain, And let the trembling chords be swept Triumphant in a silver strain.
True to thy freedom as a star,
He, and his noble lineage,
And more than this and better far,
He loved thy worn and generous race.
Across a century past on pool, Sound Ireland, over wood and vale, Where heads can think and hearts can feel Hail, patriot standard, Hail, all hail!
C. CHANNAY GREENE.

Miscellaneous.
A Coal Mine Horror.
A thrilling story of a Mine Hor's Adventure (FROM THE "ST. JOHN'S GAZETTE.") DUMFRIES, Pa., July 27.—Through the brutality of a miner in the employ of this Pennsylvania Coal Company at this place a mule boy in the same mine was recently put to so terrible an experience in one of the company's abandoned mines that he has become, it is feared, hopelessly insane, and has been sent to the lunatic asylum in Danville, Montour County.
The boy is the son of a poor widow, and although but fourteen years of age, contributed largely to her support. His name is James Gallagher.
The man Barrett, it seems, was in the habit of abusing the lad in a most shameful manner, having no apparent cause save a mere personal antipathy.
The boy stood in mortal fear of Barrett. A week or so ago the latter had been tyrannizing over young Gallagher with more than usual cruelty, and finally swore that if he did not quit his sight at once he would kill him, at the same time running towards the boy with his pick raised as if to strike him. Gallagher ran screaming from his persecutor, and made directly into the abandoned chamber, never stopping to look where he was, in his fright only thinking of getting out of the reach of Barrett. After running for some time the boy stopped, and for the first time saw that he was in the worked out mine.
Even then terror of his cruel taskmaster was uppermost in his mind, and it was not until the little mine lamp on his cap began to grow dim and finally went out that he awoke to the horror of his situation.

THE ABANDONED MINE.
If there is a chamber of horrors anywhere in the world it is a coal mine that has been worked out and deserted. Its labyrinth of silent corridors responds to the least sound with the most dismal echoes, and noxious gases generate in the pools of slimy water that exude from the walls and drip down upon the slippery floor. Pits filled with water that accumulates without interruption abound in these noxious halls, and myriads of hungry rats, bold and aggressive, haunt the desolate chambers hundreds of feet below the earth's surface, and over all the most oppressive darkness. There is no darkness like that in a mine. It is so dense and heavy that one feels its weight upon him as if he were beneath fathoms of water and the eyes do not become accustomed to its paltry sufficiency to penetrate it in the slightest degree. On every side the constant drip, drip of the unwholesome water is heard, and the noise of rats, which frequently displace some loose boulder of coal as they scamper over it, and send it tumbling to the floor, awakening a thousand horrid echoes, and sending them reverberating through the deserted chambers.
'HELP! HELP!'
It was in such a place as this that young Gallagher found himself, without a light, alone, and entirely ignorant of the way out. His first thought was to shout aloud for help, but the sound of his voice traversed the de-vicious corridors, and yelling back to him his cry prolonged and multiplied a hundred times, as if so many fiends were mocking his distress, so frightened the boy that he could not gather courage to repeat the cry, and he commenced groping his way along in silence in the direction he thought most likely would lead to the entrance of the mine. He had proceeded some ways along the slimy wall when a certain breathing and choking sensation warned him that he was trespassing where that greatest of all terrors to the miner, fire damp, prevailed, and he hastily retraced his steps with the intention of turning into the first corridor he came to. It was a long time before he reached one. It turned off to the right, and he entered it and followed it for a quarter of an hour, feeling his way along one side of it, and being careful not to turn into any of the corridors crossing it, so that he might not become confused if circumstances compelled him to again retrace his steps. Suddenly, in putting his foot forward he found no rest for it, and before he could recover his balance, he fell headlong into a pit. His head came in contact with
