HABIT.

You've seen elephants tied in the circus or the menagerie. Around one hind leg there is a strap or chain, very powerful, fastened to a ring in the wall or to a stake in the ground. The elephant, thus fastened stands swinging his head, usually with the captive foot tilted backward. That is his life and he gets used to it. He gets so thoroughly used to it after a while that it is not necessary to bind him with real iron chains, at all. In India thousands of elephants are employed in the army, in agriculture, lumbering, etc. The mahouts, who care for the big beasts have great respect for them, but they also understand the elephant's weakness. Long ago one of these Indian elephant keepers who had mislaid the chain to tether his elephant, thought he would try an experiment. He took a handful of straw, fastened it into a rope, tied it around the elephant's leg, and waited to see what he would do. The slightest pull of the big foot would have broken the flimsy binding. But the elephant never tried to break it. He said to himself: "Here I am tied up as usual. There's no escape. I must stand here until the thing that controls me comes to untie me in the morning." All the elephant keepers know now that you can tie an elephant with a wisp of straw just as well as with a chain strong enough to hold a hundred elephants. If the average human being should see a big elephant tied with a straw, reaching his trunk forward eagerly, never realizing that he could break his bonds, he would smile at the poor elephant and pity his ignorance. What would the poor elephant think if he could see the average human being, also fastened tight by his hands of straw? What about the habits which hold us and which we imagine to be too strong to be broken? How many of us are tied up and made wretched by any one of a dozen foolish, harmful habits that spoil our lives? We have been tied up for a long time, and, like the foolish elephant with the straw around his leg, we think that we are tied forever. Any one of us could break away, tear himself free with one honest effort. At this particular time there are hundreds of thousands of men worried by their own extravagance and the extravagance of their families—only a habit, a band of straw. They could break it if they would, and by breaking it they might save themselves and their families' anxiety and humiliation in the future. But, they stand there like the elephant and think that they can't get away. It is so with all our vices except those which absolutely destroy the nerve tissue. The latter are in a separate class, for they tear down the power of the will. But even those stronger bands can be broken by the man who will break them. Even a remaining fragment of the will is stronger than a habit. A sick elephant could break a chain of straw. A nerve-weakened man can break the hold of habit if he will try. What petty, feeble bands of straw hold many of us! We smoke too much and we think we can't stop it. We spend money in gambling, and we allow that vicious band to hold us, year in and year out. We acquire habits of extravagant talk, of exaggerated statement that bring contempt upon us, and we haven't the energy to step over to the other side, the truthful side. Personal vanity, foolish living in all its details—those are the straw chains that hold us human beings. All that we need is one effort, one pull to be free. About ninety-nine out of one hundred of us stand still, tied fast, hopeless, resigned, through habit. Habit is a powerful master, powerful, chiefly because we don't fight against him. Our will are free, our minds are free to use them if we will. But the centuries of superstition and dull thinking behind tie us down. And the habit of standing still, mentally, acquired in our own life-time ties us down. We are free to explore the regions of new knowledge and of new thought. But the great majority of us, like the poor old elephant, stand still, gossiping, idling, waiting quietly for the end of a life that is without meaning because it is without progress. Do you know any men in a rut? Have you any boy or girl in your house whom you would influence toward original thinking, independent action? Do you know anybody always inclined to reject the new idea because it is new—you may tell the parable of the elephant and the band of straw, adding to it a few brief, strong words of your own, in place of this long drawn-out editorial comment.

There are some very clever space writers in the world. Just now they are engaged in writing up Ethel Roosevelt who makes her formal bow to society this winter. She is not a pretty girl, and the words they use to cover up their failure to call attention to her looks must make a dictionary look like a sieve. They had the same trouble when Alice Roosevelt was a girl and met it so cleverly that some readers still think she is good looking.
