No Flour Made From One Wheat Only Is Good For BOTH Pastry And Bread.

Western Wheat makes a strong bread flour which, however, lacks flavor.

Ontario wheat makes the best full flavored pastry Flour. This is because of the peculiarities of the wheat itself. Ontario wheat is rich in nutriment and flavor but lacks strength or strong baking qualities. Western Wheat has the strength without the flavor or pastry making qualities.

"Beaver" Flour is a scientific blend of both, giving you all the flavor and nutriment and pastry making qualities of Ontario wheat with the added strength of the Western Spring Wheat.

"Beaver" Flour makes Cakes and Pastry with the lightness and delicacy of flavor of the choicest "Ontario Pastry Flour", and bread that is truly homemade in flavor with the large loaf derived from the strength of the Western Spring Wheat. It is the one flour that is equally good for bread and pastry—and best for both.

"Beaver" Flour is the original blended flourthe first and foremost in quality, strength and reliability. Besure to specify "Beaver' Flour whenever you Dealers-write us for

THE MEETING.

An hour sufficied to take the im patient wife to the bedside of her husband, who had not awakened from the deep sleep in which he had fallen after the drawing up of the will.

Mrs. Whitney had not yet arrived; and in spite of all effort to preserve secrecy about Major's Grant's resuscitation, the news spread gradually, until the whole city knew that "Major Grant, who was buried from his residence at Laurel Glade, yesterday, was found alive in the tomb by the sexton to-day, and now has every a pearance of a speedy recovery."

Noon came, and yet the sleeper slept on. At two o'clock the carriage from Laurel Glade stopped before the old sexton's house, and Mrs. Whitney, with her husband and Frankie, entered the house

The stir awoke Major Grant, and he at once called for his wife. She was bending over him when Grant Whitney and his wife entered the room. Her kiss yet lingered upon his pale lips when Mrs. Whitney came forward, and, with her embroidered handkerchief to her eyes, threw herself upon her knees, sobbing:

"Oh, Uncle Grant! How can I express my joy at this wonderful recov-

The man replied: "By kindness to my wife. I learn that she went away from Laurel Glade without the boy.'

Mrs. Grant Whitney hung her head with confusion. Her husband came forward, and, extending his hand,

"It was by no act or will of mine that Mrs. Grant was driven away from Laurel Glade. Out of respect t you, I would have entreated her to remain with us in our home, had not my wife insisted upon her going. I speak truly, Uncle Grant."

For a moment there was utter silence in that room. Major Grant had not learned of the abuse offered to his wife, and this new revelation came totally unexpected. Then he said, looking sternly at his nephew:

"It is quite evident that you fear the consequences of your infamous action. But I have left you by my late will a snug little fortune. Now, allow me to ask by what right you remain in my home, and drive my poor wife, my loved and cherished wife, into the cold world?"

Mrs. Whitney allowed her handkerchief to fall from her face, and answered defiantly:

"By the right given us by your will." Major Grant regarded her for a ent with grave reproach; then he

Then he went on in a if you are pleased to forget the injures and insults offered you in my louse by these people, you may be pleased to give them a few thousand dollars. If not, none can blame you choose to will them nothing; but the inocent boy should not be made to ose his inheritance for his mother's olly. So I have left him twenty-five housand dollars. The income of that sum will support him, and, if well hanaged, educate him. Let me sign he will, Lawyer Mellen."

The pen was given him, and he vrote his name with a bold, dashing stroke. The witnesses added their signatures, and for once villainy was punished. Mrs. Grant Whitney bore her defeat proudly. She deigned no word of reproach or entreaty, but followed her husband from the room without even saying "farewell" to he man who had done so much for them, and whom they had so bitterly

They left Frankie with his mother who could scarcely believe that fate had forgot to be cruel to her, and given her all this happiness, when her woe seemed to be most heavy and her orrows greater than she could bear. She held the hand of her kind hus oand while he slept again, and little Frankie sat beside her, glad to be left lone with his dearly loved mother. Finally, Lawyer Mellen returned me, and Mrs. Grant was left alone with her husband and child. Then came days of slowly gaining health for the invalid, until he was able to be moved to a quiet hotel. Before he left the sexton's house, he made him a present which greatly rejoiced the heart of the honest old man. It was deed of a comfortable house and garden near the spot where he had endered such signal service to Major

The purchase amounted to over five housand dollars, and the old sexton elt as rich as any man in New York State. The invalid was quietly ettled at a good hotel, and then his nealth seemed to remain about the ame, neither gaining nor losing.

Doctor Gladell advised a warmer and less variable climate, and Major Grant resolved to try a sea voyage onsequently, preparations were made r a voyage across the ocean. After onsulting her husband. Mrs Gran sent a letter to her sister May, in viting her to visit them at their

The Rev. Mr. Cameron.

May Mellen was at Old Home Farm when the letter from Mrs. Grant arrived. She had waited since their Sarah J. Dow. father was buried for some token from mons had come. She read the letter folded it away, and set about the few preparations for her journey. The following day saw her at the notel where Major Grant and his wife were boarding.

A tearful meeting between the sisters was followed by a cheerful greeting from Major Grant, who was glad husband's house. I must resent this to find another friend for his wife for whom he felt only the tenderest pity and love. He knew that he must eave her before many months had passed, and he was grieved that she must be left so friendless.

Her early fault had estranged her from all her former associates and relatives; only Christopher and May remained true. Therefore he welcomed May with more than his usual cordiality of manner

At the close of the week of May's visit to her sister, Christopher came to escort her home. Minnie came down, too, and a day of social pleasire never to be forgotten by one of that group was enjoyed. Late in the afternoon they parted, and as Major Grant, with his wife and little Frankie, was to sail for Europe the next day. the final farewells were spoken.

During May's visit to her sister they had thoroughly explained everything that had been mysterious be

Goldie thought she understood the reason of Ned Cameron discarding May when he learned of the secret of the old house in the wood. She could not believe that he would scorr May for the actions of another, and after May had returned to her home, she mentioned the subject to her husband, and he had the same views upon the case as herself. Moreover, he advised her to write to Ned Cameron and clear May's fair name of the suspicion of dishonor. She wrote the following letter at the suggestion of Major Grant; "Rev. Mr. Cameron: I have seen May, and drawn from her lips the story of your estrangement from her. She believes that you despise her on account of her sister, but I give you
