Hindenberg's Hopes

TORONTO, April 27.—(By Canadian Press)—In September, 1919, Field Marshal Paul Von Hindenburg, now President of the German Republic, wrote the story of his life. In the last chapter, "My Farewell," he says:—

"Comrades of the German Army, once the proud and mighty German Army! How can you talk of dependency? Think of the men who gave us a new Fatherland more than a hundred years ago. Their religion was their faith in themselves and in the sacredness of their cause. They built up a new Fatherland, not on the foundation of doctrines strange to them, but on those of the free development of the individual within the framework of the whole body politic, and on his sense of responsibility to the state. Germany will tread that path once more as soon as she is permitted to do so.

"Germany, the goal and starting point of so much that is inexhaustible in human civilization and culture, will count as nought only so long as she ceases to believe in her great historical mission. My faith is unshakable that the best among us, with their deep, strong thoughts, will succeed in fusing the ideas of to-day with the precious relics of ancient times and on them set the stamp of eternal qualities which will bring salvation to our Fatherland.

"Such is the firm conviction with which I have left the bloody battlefields of this War of Nations. I have witnessed the heroic struggle of my Fatherland, and I shall never believe that it was its death struggle.

"I have often been asked the question on what I based my hopes of our ultimate victory even in the darkest hours of the war. I could only point to my faith in the justice of our cause and my confidence in our Fatherland and the Army.

"For the time being a flood of wild political passion and scolding speeches has overwhelmed the ancient structure of our state, and apparently destroyed all our sacred traditions. Yet this flood will subside again. Then from the tempestuous sea of our national life will once more emerge that rock—the German Imperial House—to which the hopes of our Fathers clung in days of yore, and of which the future of our Fatherland was confidently set, nearly half a century ago, by our own efforts.

"When our national ideals and our national conscience have resumed their sway among us, we shall see how moral values have been struggling to birth in our present grievous trials and the Great War on which no nation is entitled to look back with more pride than the German people, so long as it remained true to itself. Then, and then only, will the blood of all those who fell believing in the greatness of Germany have been poured out not in vain.

"In that hope I lay down my pen and firmly build on you—Young Germany!"

Some Freak Foundations

One Thomas Nash left 50 pounds sterling a year to the bell-ringers of the Abbey Church in his native city, Bath, England, on condition that each year, on the anniversary of his wedding, they ring the whole peal of bells with clappers muffled, and that on the anniversary of his death, they ring them with clappers unmuffled. (Whether his wife was alive to appreciate the kindly intent of this bequest, we do not know.)

About 1850, a foundation was created in England to perpetuate the sacred writings of one Joanna Southcott, who founded a religious sect based on the belief that she was to give birth to the Messiah. She attracted a considerable following, which, however, faded away when she died childless.

One Bryan Mullaphy, of St. Louis, who presumably had undergone the dangers and sufferings of the overland trip to California, left a substantial part of his fortune, in 1851, to aid his compatriots in journeying across the "Great American Desert."

Stephen Girard's magnificent bequest in Philadelphia provided that no minister of any religious sect whatever should ever be admitted to the premises of the college which he founded.

There was, many years ago, a "perpetual" endowment for the ransom of prisoners of North African pirates. Endowments have been made, in the past, for teaching children to knit, card and spin, and for supplying spinning wheels to needy persons. Needless to say, there are few calls for such assistance to-day.

KIND HEARTS.

Often when I'm a sly driving, driving, hitting up some twenty miles in the hope of soon arriving, I have grief in many styles. For my silver's old and battered and her engine's out of whack, and she's always wildly scattering bolts and castings on the track. When she stops and quits her chooling I descend, with aching heart, and gadsooking and beshrewing, try to fix the broken part. I'm this gray world's worst mechanic, and you couldn't find my mate if you searched from York to Yanaek. If you combed your native state, underneath the auto creeping, soon I sprain my neck and knee, and I spring unmanly weeping that is pitiful to see. Then some fellow comes a-loping down the highway in his car, and behold me madly groping in the oil and grease and tar. And he halts his prancing Lizzie and remarks:

"You're old and fat, you are spavined, bald and dizzy, and unfit for work like that. Crawl away and drink a sagon of cold water from the rill; I will fix your busted wagon with the heartiest good will. When I'm old and fat and flabby and my bus is on the blink, and the luck seems dark and shabby, there may come some helpful gink; there may come some kindly voter who will say, as I say now, 'I will fix your loosed motor, while you rest and bathe your brow.' When he's fixed my twisted fender I remark, as off I trot, 'Hearts are just as kind and tender as they ever were, I wot.'"
