ANNABEL

THE TEMPTATION. CHAPTER XIX.

ANNABL'S JOURSET TO ENGLAND. As the sat there bewildered, motionless, yet with a rush of fearful sensations pas-sing through her soul, she was conscious that the vessel had got into metion. She heard the sail fap heavily as her head was turned, then with a few racking plunges the water began to splash at the bows, and away she weat before the wind, which, as it was blowing from the land, would soon carry, them out into the Channel. This motion of the weesal words her.

This motion of the vessel made her fully realize how helpless she was, how entirely cut off from human aid if any evil was intended her. She was power-less under whatever aspect she viewed the case; but despite her fears and the she was wholly puzzled to come to any understanding either of motive or pur-pose to be served by these extraordinary movements of which she was the subject. The form any suspicion in the direc-tion of Mrs. Langton, but somehow her thoughts turned instinctively towards Dick, and a latent distrust of him came actively forth. Thanks, the direction of the solution both from his sister and here fill and nothing as to his character, and he being fillen's brother, she was not naturally in-dined to think other than well of him. Yet she had always filt a feeling exists Dick. That subtle power of impression who exercises itself uncontrolled and nonontrollable on the mind of every one had unconsciously influenced Annabel anyone asked her, or had she asked her-self, what, cause she had to dislike him, she would have declared that she had no perticular disk to him, all cause, but would have declared that she had no pericoust systeridy. But nox, in the circumstances which surrounded her, she allowed the hither to uncogni-ding which the signs of that evil cavers is habits, were all and has a sized and songht from it. Freely seeking for this, she easi-ly found it. Dick's manner, his look, his habits, were all and has a sized and an so has habits, were all and has a sized and any from henselves on their votaries that the fine ense of the virtuous and

During the railway journey through France he had cocupied for most part of the way a seat opposite her. She had thus an opportunity of viewing thin more closely an 1 steadily than sace ever done; and the strengthening of the antavorable impression was the result. He had an appearance which caused her involum-tarily to recoil as from something evil and dangerous, but beyond that his face pre-sented to her a vague, and uneasy remin-iscence. Once and again she thought she had seen it on a past occasion, but when or where she could not determine. Somtimes she imagined she was about to identify the time, the place, and the ce-casion, but the remembrance could not be called up, and at last she concluded that it must have in a dream. Bro. McDonald, though less extensively known is not less worthy of confidence. He is esteemed by all who know him, as a man of unbending integrity, and marked decision and energy of character ; a thoughtful and carnest preacher, and a persevering Michigan Central and Erie Railroads student. He formerly studied at Victoria College, and he has recently completed the medical course, and taken the degree of M. D., which gives him a spec-
