the transactions being the landers of the chern that greed the context, the chern that greed the context, and the control of the chern that greed the context of the chern that greed the chern the chern that the letter of the latter of the l had no knowledge Omerally of the dependency of the Minister of the Ministry, in advising the Crown to act without a communication from the Commons, was the height of autacity, and an insult to the Chamber. He then examined the several precedents, cited at various times by the Premier, and showed how he had abandoned them all but the Melville case, which he showed was strictly opposed to the present case. There could be no more revolting scene than that of the Minister of Justice going from one Judge to another, begging them to try him. He (Mr Blake) was not a member of the Conservative party, but he was conservative of the principles of the Constitution when abuses of the prerogative occurred. They were abuses advised by the Minister, and he instanced the case of the impeachment of Buckingham, in the reign of Charles I., as a parallel to the present one. He then criticised the proceedings of the Commissioners, and called attention that the published in the leading newspapers; and went on to urge that Mr. Mackenzie would have been recreant to his duty if he had not, at the criticus, and the rejection of the continuous arising out of the Paciliament at a resolution expressing the judgment of the House on the whole of the questions arising out of the Paciliament and prevailed for many years, and the treatment of all Chronic when the first instanced saign nearly the proposal that the existing form of trying petitions by Parliamentary Committee had failed to stop it. It did not lie in his mouth, therefore, to say a large expenditure was forced upon him, be anused and forced it. The pretence of the Prime Minister that he would appoint a Committee to go roving about investigating bribery, might be considered, if it was sciously made. He was sure, how-
