Work in the West. Principal McKay, of Vancouver, was the chief speaker of the evening. His address dealt with the work of the missionary movement in Vancouver, and along the Pacific coast. The menace of the yellow reril was being felt on the coast already. In this connection he spoke of the alertness of the Japanese in competition with other nations of the world, and predicted that the time would come when Japanese steamers would be steaming into Montreal and competing with the shipping trade of the world. In Vancouver, one in every nine persons was an Oriental. The problem of the foreign mission is the greatest mission problem the church has to face. The way to face this menace was to Christianize these people to a higher life spiritually. God did not make Canada for a handful of white people.
