

all good? One hour of such intercourse is more to the Christian than all this world can give, or all it has to take away. How much greater, then, will be our joy, when we are permitted to behold for ourselves the Saviour who has redeemed us with His blood, and ransomed us with His life; and when our enlightened and strengthened minds can fully comprehend the depth and magnitude of that love which prompted so great a sacrifice!"

"I see now," said Tommy thoughtfully; "it is this wonderful, unlimited love which will pervade every spirit assembled there, that will render the life in Heaven an endless joy."

"Yes," said Mr. Seton, "to know our sins forgiven, and meet our Saviour, not as an angry Judge, but as a forgiving Father, then, and then only, can we realize the fullness of His mercy and our pardon."
