HOCKEN ON PARKS.

Someone has said that the affairs of this city are run on the village plan. This is not an accurate statement. But so far as the administration of our outbreaks in Great Britain in 1892 were parks is concerned, it is fairly applicable if we judge from the revelations elicited during the parks enquiry. Let us get away from the village idea on parks. Controller Hocken and his special committee seem to have struck jupon a larger plan in a parks commission composed of six members to be elected for varying terms. Six public-spirited, large-minded citizens would revolutionate out parks administration. The best feature about this plan is its entire departure from the old order, than which nothing could have been weaker. A severe shock to all civilized peoples. The parks commission would bring dignity, brond dealing and rational progress to the administration of our parks. The electrical delegopent is in a parks commission would bring dignity, brond dealing and rational progress to the administration of our parks.
