ASSISTANCE WELCOME IN THE CAMPAIGN FOR BIGGER, BUSIER ST. JOHN

St. Louis Has Set Out to Raise Half-Million Fund For Their City—We Have the Location and All, Now For the Cash to Boom Things

Half a million dollars to be used as a fund for attracting new industries. This is the sum that the city of St. Louis has set out to raise and the campaign is likely to prove a big success. This amount is not for the purpose of giving bonuses or offering inducements to factories in lines at present not represented in that city. Last fall a meeting of the various civic and commercial organizations and public spirited citizens was held and in less than a week after this meeting, a number of prominent men had subscribed $10,000 each toward this fund. Not all the subscribers were men in business, as among the names of merchants and manufacturers is found the name of D. R. Francis, citizen and patriot. Contributions varying in amount are pouring in from all sections

STOMACH TROUBLES

Often Come From Weak, Exhausted Nerves—Great Results From Using

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

When the nerves become exhausted the first sign of trouble often comes from the stomach. The nerves which control the flow of digestive fluids fail and the result is loss of appetite, indigestion, nervous headache and sleeplessness. Opium and narcotics cannot possibly do more than afford temporary relief, and aid to digestion are merely makeshifts. To get well you must get the nervous system back into condition by such treatment as Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food. Here is a letter which illustrates the point. Mr. John McGee, 316 Hunter Street, W. Hamilton, Ont., writes: "My trouble was principally with my stomach. As a result of weak nerves my appetite was poor and I had several attacks of indigestion. I found that Dr. Chase's Nerve Food relieved me and since using it I am able to eat and sleep as usual. My appetite is good, my nerves strong and vigorous and I feel an altogether different person. I feel very grateful for the benefit I have derived from this medicine." If you are in earnest about a cure why not make it thorough by using Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food regularly and persistently until the whole nervous system is restored and you can know again the joys of living. Dr. A. W. Chase's Nerve Food, 50¢ a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers; or Edmanston, Bates & Co., Toronto.

The Comet as Seen Here

A good many persons in St. John last night saw the nucleus of Halley's comet. It was rather disappointing as there was no trace of the tail and the comet itself was very dim. D. L. Hutchinson, of the local weather bureau, said that it would be brighter tonight, although it would be further away. A party watched it from the top of the custom house. It was first visible about an hour after sunset and then appeared to be directly over the spire of St. Peter's church and travelling northward. It was directly in the sunset glow and its brilliancy might have been attributable to the fact that the sky was somewhat hazy.

Two Towns Destroyed

Paul's Valley, Okla., May 20.—Marysville, a small town fifteen miles northwest of here, was wiped off the map by a tornado early this evening, and several persons killed, according to meagre reports received here tonight. The town of McCarty, near Marysville, was nearly all swept away and three persons were killed. All wires are down. Relief parties probably will be sent out tonight, thus if the hardest hail storms in the history of this region sweep over a stretch of country near here this evening, in places obliterating vegetation.

THE INGLENOOK PHILOSOPHER of Kennebecasis Bay.

It was rumored that after planting his garden Uncle Silas had mysteriously disappeared. The neighbors said that for several days no smoke had curled from the chimney of his cottage and no light had shown from its windows of an evening. I grew alarmed. Perhaps Uncle Silas was ill. Perhaps with unseeing eyes he sat in his easy chair staring at the grate in which the fire long since had expired. So one morning Little Fred and I walked down the road to investigate.

We knocked at Uncle Silas's door, but there was no response. We tried the latch but the door was fastened on the inside. We peered in but saw no sign of life. One of the windows had not been secured. I assisted Little Fred to climb through this and directed her to explore every room thoroughly. She reported that she found the house in perfect order, but no trace of Uncle Silas. She said, however, that his value, that usually stood in a corner of the sitting room, was gone, and that his Sunday clothes were missing from the chest. So we concluded that Uncle Silas had gone away on a visit, and went home with minds relieved from anxiety. Two or three days later, it was said that a light had been seen in one of Uncle Silas's rooms the night before, and Little Fred and I walked down to congratulate him on his return, and to gratify our curiosity, the Silas looked very sedate, but he greeted us warmly.

Said he, "I could resist the impulse no longer—I have been home to the place where I was born, which is our only home in this world. After riding more than 200 miles behind a steam engine I alighted at the village nearest the old farm, but except for its natural surroundings I would never have recognized it. The buildings that I knew had been supplanted by more pretentious ones. There were no cows grazing in the village green, and about the shop doors and in the streets I saw not a single familiar face. I enquired for some of the boys I used to know and men stared at me as they stared at Rig Van Winkle when he returned after his long sleep in the Kattskibb. They were dead—they had gone away—they had been lost sight of—they had been forgotten. Next morning I started out foot for the farm—the old homestead. The road and the natural landscape generally were familiar, but the old houses where I visited with my mother were gone and their places were occupied by more pretentious structures. Gone, too, was the old carding mill, the grist mill, the blacksmith shop, and the ruin that was said to be haunted in the old days. All houses wherein men have lived and died.

Are haunted houses? "Ah yes! I encountered many a ghost in my walk that morning. The school-house where I studied the rudiments of letters was gone, and a more pretentious one stood near its site; and gone, too, was the old homestead, a row of great maples, which I saw planted, showing where it used to be. I roamed over the once familiar hills and followed the brook, where I used to fish for trout, to its source, but in all places where men have lived and died.

Dr. Chase's Ointment is a certain and guaranteed cure for all kinds of itching, bleeding, and other skin diseases. It is sold by all druggists and is the only one that is guaranteed to cure.

my walks I did not encounter one familiar face, one person who had ever heard of Silas. "I came to the home of my fathers, and I said 'The friends of my youth! Where are they?' And Echo answered, 'Where?' As we walked homeward, Little Fred asked, "Is life really so sad?" And I replied:—"When you are as old as Uncle Silas, you will be able to answer your own question." ### REV. J. L. GORDON DISCUSSES THE PROMISE OF GEORGE V.

Former St. John Clergyman, Now in Winnipeg, Reviews Life and Character of Monarch

"George V.—His character, hopes, dangers and opportunities," was the topic selected by Rev. J. L. Gordon, formerly of St. John, in his sermon at the Central Congregational church, Winnipeg, on Sunday last. His text was the advice of King David to Solomon: "And thou, Solomon, my son, know thou the God of thy fathers." "On Friday, May 7," said Mr. Gordon, "Edward the Seventh had an audience with his ministers. Twenty-four later, a new king was on the throne. At midnight on the 8th of May, there passed to the honor roll of the British sovereigns, Edward VII. "He loved his people as a king loves, as a father loves. Better than that, he loved his people as a man loves. What a contrast between the death of the King of Britain and the death of the King of the Belgians, men separated in age only a few years. The memory of the just is blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot. You never know the strength, the abiding honor of a great character, until you put him in contrast with an individual who had the same opportunities, and absolutely failed. "Edward VII ended his reign on a day of drizzle and mist. George V. began his reign next morning in the sunshine. God grant that the sunshine may continue. "The name of the new king is George Frederick Albert Ernest. He has chosen to be known as monarch of England by the name of George. Thackeray's story of the four Georges does not give us a very bright picture of the reigns of the monarchs of that name. It seems as though the new king had chosen to ascend the throne as a fifth George, in order that he might make the name as honorable as his father made that of Edward. Starts at Right Age

"Many doubts have been expressed of George V. We look towards our new king, and ask questions of his strength and of his weakness. He is forty-five years of age—a splendid age to assume the responsibilities of kingship. Many are the histories of men who have accomplished great things in literature, literature, generalship, in the fourth decade of their lives. "Will George V. be as popular as his father? Scarcely. Edward VII had a genius for popularity. He stood out among men with a pronounced personality and magnetism. But George V. has had forty-five years preparation, under one of the greatest diplomats of the world in the person of his father, for his place as head of the British Empire. The first acts of his reign struck a popular note. In his first speech he had a tender word to say of his father and a kind word of his wife.

"What kind of a king will he be? It has given the least man the opportunity to be a king. Pray for George V. that he may be king worthy; but in God's name pray too for yourself, that you may be king in your own corner of His universe."
